April 24, Fred Vanhyde, a Garrett trainman, was caught by a water tank rope this side of Chicago. He got to his home in Garrett that same day. April 25, the Auburn DAILY COURIER published it. May 11, the Clipper, published at Vanhyde's home had it in the form of a brief item with no credit.

AUBURN AS A MODEL.

We Set the Pace in a Difficult, Legal and Business Matter.

It will surprise many, even of our citizens to learn that Auburn has become a model of correct business management under difficult circumstances. Yet such is the case. It will be recalled that over a year ago, when we began to move for the construction of a system of water works, we found our municipal debt was already up to the 2-per cent limit. So we could not issue bonds to meet the expense. But we wanted the improvements, and so a way to get them was studied up. A company was formed on a plan that would make the bonds a safe investment for capitalists and at the same time would secure to the town the future ownership. The drafting of these conditions was a difficult as well a delicate matter. We believe this was done by James H. Rose, who acted as attorney for the proposed company, assisted, we believe by D. M. Link, then as now, the attorney of the town. Our own understanding at he time was that D. A. Garwood also assisted in drafting the ordinance in which the matter was put into form. Then came several sessions of careful study on the part of the Council. Then the specifications by engineer VanAuken were printed and used, and the water works were constructed. Many other cities and towns had tried similar plans before, but had generally encountered more or less trouble. Now come some of the legal and engineering journals of New York City and say that Auburn, Indiana, is the only town that ever got up a safe and perfect plan and carried it out. Other cities and towns, in conditions similar to ours, have found this out and are asking for copies of our plan. Laporte, is going to put in new water works by going to the Kankakee about eight miles south, and it may cost them $100,000. But they must have it, as their old plant depends on the lakes near by. But these get so low in the summer and high in the spring as to be of little use. So, they are going to proceed in a manner similar to the Auburn plan. Hearing that our plan was the best so far tried they have sent to us for a copy, and Milo Husselman is engaged in making the copy for them. It is a compliment to Auburn attorneys, Auburn's council and her business men.

No Right To Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, skin eruptions and wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate the stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nreves, bright eyes. smooth velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good-looking, charming, woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at H. B. McCord's Drug Store.

Needed Her Support.

In a divorce suit filed in Crawfordsville last week, Mrs. Mattie Stephens alleges that her husband endeavored to force her to eat carpet tacks and glass. He had witnessed such a performance in a side show, and figured that if his wife could learn to digest such truck she would be very valuable to him as a freak.

Trees That Grow Bread

The bread-fruit tree of Ceylon is very remarkable. Its fruit is baked and eaten as we eat bread, and is equally good and nutritious, says the Ladies Home Journal. In Barbutu, South America, is a tree which by piercing the trunk produces milk which the inhabitants feed their children. In the interior of Africa is a tree that produces excellent butter. It resembles the American oak, and its fruit, from which the butter is prepared, is not unlike the olive. Park, the great traveler, declared that the butter surpassed any made in England from cow's milk. Sierra Leone is the cream-fruit tree, the fruit of which is quite agreeable in taste. At Table Bay, near the Cape of Good Hope, is a small tree the berries of which make excellent candies. It is also found in the Azores. The vegetable tallow tree also grows in Sumatra, in Algeria and in China. In the island of Chusan large quantities of oil and tallow are extracted from its fruit, which is gathered in November or December, when the trne has lost all its leaves. The bark of a tree in China produces a beautiful soap. Trees of the sapindus, or soapberry, order, also grow in the north of Africa. They are amazingly prolific, and their fruit contains about 38 per cent of saponin.

An Obstinate Sore Cured.

Jas. G. Amnertof, Della, O. writes: I had an obstinate sore on my face which everything else failed to heal, after one application of Banner Salve it began to heal and after three applications it was entirely healed leaving no scar.

Commissioners Meet

The Board held a session yesterday, all being present. Their work was to fix the county districts and to let the abutment for Fish Creek bridge. The districts are given elsewhere.

The Fish Creek bridge has hung fire a little. The bridge proper, was let at the first trial, but not the stone abutments, as there was only one bid for the latter. Yesterday there were two bids for the stone work and excavation.

Mr. Ruple bid for the stone work at $8.40 per cubic yard; for the excavation, $1.14 for wet excavation, and 26 cents a cubic yard for dry.

Wm. Leberentz of Ashley bid on stone work at $10.95 per cubic yard, and on excavation 60 cents a cubic yard for wet and 50 cents for dry.

Ruple had much the lowest bid, but his bond was not considered satisfactory, and so the contract has not been let. We do not know now, when it will be, but time is passing, and it should be done soon.

The matter of repairs on the jail and on the court house came up and plans had been prepared by Wing and Mahurin. This firm had also submitted plans for the new power house that is to be made. The specifications for all this work can be seen in the auditor's office, and the contract will be let to the lowest responsible bidder, June 23.

INCURABLE DISEASES

Many diseases considered incurable are catarrh under other names. Simple catarrh in the head is called incurable. Consumption is catarrh of the lungs, and its victim is, no doubt, past help in the more advanced stages; but great numbers of people die of consumption needlessly. It is certain that every phase of catarrh, including many cases of consumption, are cured by the right treatment. Pe-ru-na, Dr. Hartman's great prescription, attacks catarrhal diseases scientifically and cures them. Dr. Hartman explains it fully in his books which are mailed on application. Here is a letter from Mrs. Harmening, Mazo Manie, Wis., who is one of many cured of consumption by Pe-ru-na. She says:

Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

DEAR SIRS:—"I cannot praise your remedy too highly. Last winter I had la grippe and hemorrhage of the lungs followed. All the doctors around here told me I had to die of consumption. Then I thought I would ask Dr. Hartman for advice, which I did. He prescribed Pe-ru-na for me, and I took it according to his directions and was cured. I advise everybody that is troubled with lung disease to take Dr. Hartman's treatment. I am sure they will not regret it if they do. I am now enjoying good health, and can thank Pe-ru-na for it."

CIRCLING THE GLOBE

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World, Embracing Foreign Affairs and Home Happenings.

Good Work by the Gunboats.

Manila special: The army "tin clad" gunboats Luna de Bay and Cavedonga, under command of Capt. Grant, steamed up the Rio Grande to Calumpit, clearing the entire country of rebels from the bay upward. When the vessels reach Maccabebee, about a thousand of the inhabitants of the place assembled upon the banks of the river, cheering the expedition lustily. Capt. Grant was given an ovation when he went ashore. Many of the Maccabebees expressed themselves as being anxious to enter the American service for the campaign against the Tagals.

Killed in a Wreck.

A construction train on the Pittsburgh and Western Railroad went through a trestle to Spangler's Run, near New Castle, Pa., eighty feet below. Two men were killed and six injured. The names are: Killed—William Wolcott, brakeman; unknown Hungarian. Injured—Even Brosiche, Peter Bennett, Mike Mopin, Peter Milich, Mike Vadowitch, John Slorelsche. The injured were brought to the New Castle Hospital. Several, it is thought, will die. The trestle was a temporary structure.

Alaskan Boundary.

Senator Fairbanks of Indiana, was at the State Department recently and saw Secretary Hay regarding matters pertaining to the American-Anglo Commission of which he is Chairman. Fairbanks will leave Seattle for Alaska about June 10, for the purpose of making a personal investigation of the Alaskan boundary, which is one of the main questions of difference between the United States and Great Britain.

A Ghastly Crime.

The bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Tincknall were found in their rooms at Auburn, N. Y. The man was dead without a mark upon him. The woman was unconscious, with the side of her head battered in and the brain protruding. She was taken to the hospital, but cannot live. It is supposed that her husband tried to kill her with a hammer and then committed suicide by poison.

Wireless Telegraphy.

Gen. Greely has made the first authoritative statement as to the progress making in the development of wireless telegraphy under the auspices of the United States Signal Corps. The important conclusion was reached by Greely that the wireless system is not likely to supplant the ordinary method of telegraphic communication. The results so far obtained have been uncertain.

Six Burned to Death.

A dispatch from Spring Place, a village a few miles from Dalton, Ga., conveys the intelligence that the residence of Dr. Bagwell was burned, and that five of the doctor's children and an old housekeeper were burned to death. Dr. Bagwell is the leading druggist of Spring Place and a practicing physician. The property loss will reach several thousand dollars.

Man and Wife Asphyxiated.

At Philadelphia, John Binz, aged 23 years, and his wife, Henrietta, aged 21, were asphyxiated by illuminating gas as they slept recently. They were found dead in bed in the morning, with the gas issuing from the burner. The couple were married only recently and their death is supposed to have been accidental.

Italians Warned Off.

The Erie Railroad Company brought two carloads of New York Italians to Niles, Ohio, and tried to get them to fill the places of striking section men at Niles, Mineral Ridge, Canfield and Leetonia on the Erie road. The strikers warned the new men, and they did not start to work. If they do there may be a fight.

Involves France.

A dispatch to the New York Journal and Advertiser from Manila says: The insurgents have assassinated M. Dumarais, a Frenchman, who crossed their lines under a flag of truce. He was negotiating with the Filipinos for the release of Spanish prisoners. This action may cause a demonstration by France.

A Cyclone in Kansas.

A cyclone struck Coldwater, Kan., completely destroying twelve houses and killing Joseph Bowers, a prominent cattleman. Aldrich's general store was wrecked and a brick block in Main street blown down. The Presbyterian Church was blown away and the Court-house unroofed.

Masonic Temple Attractions, Fort Wayne, Ind.

June 10.—Richard Mansfield, in "Cyrano de Bergerac."

Schooner Lost.

Seattle (Wash.) special: The schooner Loyal, which left St. Michaels, Alaska, last September for this port, has not been heard from since. It is believed she foundered during a storm in Behring Sea. There were twelve men aboard when she left St. Michaels.

Damaged By Flood.

A break in the Erie Canal, near Spencerport, N. Y., has caused a flood of all the country round about there. The damage to Spencerport alone will amount to $50,000.

Strikers Fight in Havana.

At Havana, the stevedores have begun a strike for an advance of wages to $3 a day in American money, instead of $2.50. An attempt to supply the places of the strikers with Chinese resulted in a severe fight. About 100 Chinamen are employed, in spite of the opposition of the strikers.

American Sovereignty Conceded.

Aguinaldo's representatives to the American Philippines commission have formally admitted the sovereignty of the United States over the Philippine archipelago, and it is the confident expectation of the President that the end of the rebellion is close at hand.

NUMBER OF FAILURES SMALL.

Report for April Shows a New Record—Dun's Report.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "The failures in April were the smallest in any month since records by months began, 38 per cent smaller than in April of last year, not a third of the amount in 1897 and not half the amount in April of any previous year. It is not inconsistent nor strange if business halts, because it has been crowded to the utmost for four months in anticipating future needs on account of new combinations proposed. In some cases prices have been advanced so far as to check new business and in others works have been engaged so far ahead that new orders cannot be taken. Yet new business in amount which would have been astonishing two years ago is still coming forward. Failures for the week have been 158 in the United States, against 238 last year, and 23 in Canada, against 25 last year."

FATAL FIRE AT MASSILLON, OHIO.

One Fireman Killed and Another Injured by Falling Walls.

A fire originating through spontaneous combustion burned Russell & Co.'s immense paintshop and thrashing machine warehouse at Massillon, Ohio. The building contained several hundred finished machines and large quantities of paints. The loss is estimated at $500,000, partially covered by insurance. Volunteer Fireman Albert Bamberger and Lieut. Christian Baatz were caught beneath a falling wall. Bamberger was killed instantly. Baatz' injuries will probably prove fatal. Bamberger was 20 years old, and leaves a widow and two children. Baatz is about 40, and has a large family. Canton firemen arrived too late to be of assistance. The fire was confined entirely to the one building.

CANNOT TOUCH A HOMESTEAD.

Important Decision Under the National Bankruptcy Law.

Judge Speer of the Federal District Court for the southern district of Georgia has made an important decision under the national bankruptcy law. It is to the effect that the United States courts have no jurisdiction over a homestead taken by a bankrupt; that the homestead belongs to the State courts and cannot be considered in the United States court as an asset of the bankrupt, and as regards the homestead the trustee of the bankrupt must look elsewhere than to the United States court. The effect of this decision will be far-reaching, and will no doubt be the cause of many parties going into bankruptcy who have heretofore held out.

Yukon Boats Are Doomed.

Advices from the north confirm previous reports that nearly half of the Yukon fleet is fast in the ice and will probably be destroyed when the expected freshets come. Among the vessels in danger is the Herman of the Alaska Exploration Company. She is near Nulato and is on a sandbar in the middle of the river, broadside on the current. Four miles above St. James mission is the Dawson City, owned by a San Francisco firm. She is fast in the ice and with no chance to escape. The Gov. Stoneman, owned by Portland capitalists, is about twenty-five miles above the mouth of the Tanana river, and she will probably break up when the freshets come. The May D. is also doomed. She is near Rampart City fast in the ice in the middle of the river. The Trenton is close to the May D. and she cannot escape destruction. The Clutco, owned in San Francisco; the Seattle No. 1 of the Seattle-Yukon company, and the City of Chicago, owned by Chicago capitalists, are in a bunch a short distance above Rampart City. They will probably be crushed to pieces with the first cake of ice that comes down the river.

Verdict Against Mobsmen.

At Louisville, Ky., a Federal court jury composed exclusively of white men returned a verdict awarding George Dinning, a colored man, $50,000 damages against six members of a mob that on the night of Jan. 27, 1897, attacked him in his home in Simpson County. The mob was formed to warn him to leave the country, he having been accused of stealing chickens. He refused to go and the mob opened fire. Dinning responded with a shot that killed one man. Then he fled. The next day the neighbors drove his wife and twelve children away and burned his home. Dinning went to Louisville and filed suit against the leaders for the full sum awarded. The outcome is regarded as sensational, indicating an entirely new method of dealing with and punishing lawless mobs.

Accident at Coney Island.

More than fifty feet of the end of the old iron pier at Coney Island, New York, was washed away by the waves. Sixty men were at the end of the pier at the time. About forty of them were able to cling to the pier wreckage and were rescued by the prompt action of the police and firemen. The remaining twenty were left on a bulkhead cut off from land by a gap in the pier. These were taken off by the United States revenue cutter Scout.

Censures Miles and Eagan.

In its report the court of inquiry which investigated the beef charges censures General Miles for not reporting the unfitness of the rations at the time that the complaints reached him. General Eagan is severely scored for buying such immense quantities of an untried ration. The packers are exonerated, it being shown that they furnished the same goods that they put on the general market.

Railroad Men's Grievances End.

Railroad employes of the Youngstown, Newcastle, Cleveland and Kent yards of the Erie lines are elated over a conference had a few nights ago. The grievance committee of the division met President Thomas at Kent, Ohio, and after a short session all pending difficulties were settled.

Last Dividend of Iron Hall.

Judge McMaster of the Marion County (Ind.) Superior Court has ordered the receiver of the Order of the Iron Hall to pay the final dividends—one-fifth of 1 per cent. The distribution of this dividend will close the receivership, which has existed seven years.

Indian Outbreak Is Quelled.

United States troops under Captain Yeatman have quelled an Indian outbreak near Haines Mission, Alaska. Two Chilkat Indian chiefs and several bucks were taken prisoners and will be sent to Sitka for trial.

Two Drowned and Two Saved.

By the capsizing of a boat off Belvidere Point, Cal., Frank J. Grimm and Herbert G. Edwards were drowned. Dr. Allen and H. O. Haydefelt, who were also in the boat at the time of the accident, were saved.

May Tap Lake Michigan.

Secretary of War Alger has given his consent to the tapping of Lake Michigan for the Chicago drainage channel. The matter will be referred to Congress for ultimate decision at its next session.

Death of Mrs. W. C. Whitney.

Mrs. William C. Whitney, wife of the famous Secretary of the Navy, died at New York from the effects of her fall from her horse more than a year ago.

Twentieth Century Surgery.

Two operations of an extremely rare and dangerous character were performed recently at the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, and the two patients, a boy and a girl, are on the road to recovery. Both operations were the removal of one of the jugular veins. Madeline Burns, 17 years old, had more than four inches of her left jugular vein removed, everything in her case working out favorably. The condition of William Jennings, 19 years old, was, however, more serious. He was taken to the hospital suffering from necrosis of the bone behind the left ear. Three inches of diseased bone was removed from the patient's skull and an abscess in the brain cut out. It was then seen that the removal of the left jugular vein was imperative owing to the formation within it of three clots of blood, which, unless removed, would inevitably result in death. Before the application of anaesthetics the situation was explained to young Jennings and he was told that the chances of saving his life were slim. The young fellow, however, pluckily told the surgeons to go ahead. The jugular vein was then severed just above the collar bone, and having also been cut near the upper part of the head the ends were knotted. A portion of vein about three inches in length was then taken out.

PURSUES HUSBAND ON A WHEEL.

Woman Bent on Vengeance, Rides from Texas to St. Louis.

A little woman dressed in a bicycle suit of army blue and giving her name as Ernie Bloss called at police headquarters in St. Louis and searched the rogues' gallery for the picture of a man named Warren Bennett Ulysses Russell Mayne, who married her at Fort Worth, Texas, one year ago and then deserted her. She followed him all the way from Odessa, Tex., on her bicycle and intimates that when she finds the man she will shoot him. The wronged woman believes that Mayne has another wife at Quincy, Ill. Before leaving his Texas wife Mayne told her he had wealthy relatives at Albany, N. Y.

SHE HORSEWHIPS A MAYOR.

Minnie Crawford Lays the Lash on John R. Cassidy at Bellefontaine, Ohio.

Mayor John R. Cassidy, of Bellefontaine, Ohio, was horsewhipped by Miss Minnie Crawford on the main street of the city. Miss Crawford, who is a milliner, had recently been subpoenaed as a witness in the mayor's court and had failed to respond. She became angered at the Mayor and lay in wait for him as he was going to his office. Drawing a whip from under her cape she lashed his Honor over the head and shoulders, forcing him to take refuge in a drug store.

HERDERS ATTACKED BY INDIANS.

Red Men Demand Possession of Land Once Their Reservation.

News has been received that Weasel Skin and some other Indians had terribly beaten a number of Mexican herders in the lower Florida mesa, near the Animas river, Colo., and had killed five head of horses and a large herd of sheep belonging to the Mexicans' employers. The Indians threaten more extreme measures if the white people do not keep away. It seems difficult for some of the Indians to learn that this part of their former reservation is now the white man's property.

Accident Near South Superior, Wis.

The long wooden railroad bridge spanning the Nemadji River below South Superior, Wis., by which the Great Northern reaches Allouez Bay, fell while a heavy train was attempting the passage. Engineer Thomas Quinn was caught underneath his engine and killed and Fireman Harry Miller was crushed between the cab and engine, receiving injuries which may prove fatal.

Two Men Killed and Four Injured.

As a result of a premature explosion at a Yardley, Pa., stone quarry Shuvelin, the lessee, and John Burns, the foreman, were instantly killed. John Pott, another employe, had his right leg crushed and three men who were engaged in loading carts directly beneath where the blast exploded were severely injured.

WATSON ORDERED TO MANILA.

Will Relieve Dewey When the Admiral Wishes to Quit.

Rear Admiral John C. Watson has been ordered to proceed to Manila to relieve Admiral Dewey as commander-in-chief of the Asiatic station. Secretary Long said that Rear Admiral Watson would not succeed Admiral Dewey as a member of the Philippine commission, and that the Admiral will remain in Manila until the commission's work is completed. The orders to Rear Admiral Watson are due to the intimations received from the Admiral of his desire to return to the United States and of the request of Watson to be assigned to duty. While it is impossible as yet to fix an exact date for the return of Admiral Dewey, navy department officials express the belief that it will only be a matter of a short while. They base this opinion on the supposition that the native army is about to surrender and that the opposition in the Philippines cannot long continue. Even at this early date the national welcome to Dewey on his home coming has been proposed.

The arrangements for Dewey's return have been understood to contemplate a passage through the Suez and entry through New York, in order that he may proceed at once to Washington and that the Olympia may be overhauled and refitted at Brooklyn navy yard. Dewey's home is in New England, and it is believed he has expected to come back that way. The Olympia, however, was built on the Pacific coast and has been engaged in protecting that port. Her crew is largely composed of westerners and the coast cities believe they have first right to welcome her. The entire West is united in demanding that the admiral be allowed to enter the country at the nearest port to the scene of his triumph and proceed overland to Washington.

DEATH RODE THE WIND.

Seventy-five New Graves Tell the Story of Missouri's Cyclone.

The death-dealing cyclone, of which Kirksville, Mo., was the especial target, was one of the worst calamities in the history of the State. Seventy-five new graves is a most eloquent, and yet most terrible, evidence of the awfulness of the storm. In the hospitals and homes are 200 human beings suffering from broken limbs or worse injuries, and over all this scene is the grief of the bereaved men and women who mourn the loss of friends and homes. Years will not blot out the memory of this terrible storm, which left a path of death and desolation in its wake.

At Kirksville over 100 houses were torn to splinters, and of the inmates of these houses none escaped injury—and many met death; death came in all shapes of horror, and the sights that greeted the eyes of those who were early upon the scene after the fury of the wind had been spent shall be memorable for their gruesomeness and ghastliness. The walls of buildings fell with a crash that sounded above the roar of the storm, burying people in the ruins. Frame buildings were twisted and lifted from their foundations; others were utterly demolished, pieces of them being carried for miles. The bodies of the storm's human victims were found hundreds of yards away from where their homes had stood.

Women and children ran shrieking through the streets; the injured, many of them made prisoners beneath the fallen walls, moaned a piteous chorus, while scattered about, their faces or their hands or their legs protruding from the wreckage, were scores of bleeding corpses. And of these sickening, horrible reminders of the calamity many were the bodies of children—of babies—their tender forms pierced and crushed and mangled by the fallen timbers. It was indeed a sight to make the strongest quake. It was a picture of desolation, of ruin, of death

HIS SHELL A SUCCESS.

Gathmann's Gun Cotton Projectile Tested at Sandy Hook.

Louis Gathmann, the Chicago inventor, achieved a remarkable triumph at Sandy Hook. A big cannon loaded with a gun cotton shell, to which was attached one of his special fuses, was fired. The gun was blown to pieces, but the shell remained intact, showing that through the device of Mr. Gathmann, gun cotton shells can be safely used in war as engines of destruction. The experiment further demonstrated that gun cotton will not detonate when discharged by means of a high pressure.

It was believed the cruiser Vesuvius had made a new era in naval warfare when gun cotton shells were discharged by pneumatic pressure. In the Sandy Hook experiment the gun was purposely exploded in order to demonstrate that gun cotton could be used with the minimum of danger. The element of safety was introduced by the Gathmann fuse.

SHIPS START HOME.

TRANSPORTS LEAVE MANILA WITH SICK AND WOUNDED.

General Otis Reports Vessels that Have Started from Manila for San Francisco—Volunteers Are to Come When More Regulars Arrive.

Gen. Otis has informed the War Department of the sailing of six chartered transports from Manila for San Francisco. They are the City of Pueblo, the Zealandie, the Pennsylvania, the Nelson, the Cleveland and the St. Paul. Sick and wounded men are being brought home on these vessels.

The Cleveland and the Nelson are freight boats, but the others could have brought volunteers if it had been considered advisable to reduce the effective forces during the negotiations now being conducted with a view of ending further Filipino resistance to the American Government. The Pennsylvania has been stationed several months at Cebu, and the St. Paul has been at Iloilo since fall. These vessels will be returned to their owners when they reach San Francisco, and as rapidly as possible all the remaining chartered vessels will be released.

Gen. Otis cables: "Volunteers understand they will begin to leave for the United States the latter part of the month; know importance of their presence here at this time and accept sacrifice which United States interests make imperative."

War Department officials say that the cable regarding the return of the volunteers indicates that the troops are making no clamor to be sent home, but see the necessity of remaining until they can be relieved by the regulars now on their way and to be sent to Manila as soon as they can be shipped.

There have been many applications from the West to have the volunteers brought home by the Suez canal route. A Washington dispatch says investigation shows that it is impracticable. The Suez canal route is a much longer route than that across the Pacific and the men would be kept on the transports from ten to fifteen or twenty days longer than if they came across the Pacific. The distance is estimated to be about 8,000 miles longer by the Suez canal route than across the Pacific, and at this season of the year it is considered more unsafe, owing to climatic conditions, especially for the troops who have been in the tropical climate of the Philippines. The greater part of the voyage would have to be made through the tropical climate even farther south than Manila, as they would have to skirt the southern coast of Asia, where plague spots exist at all times and especially in the summer season. By the other route, the transports can sail north to Japan, and then across the Pacific, in a more salubrious climate, which will make the voyage beneficial to the men. The expensive tolls at the Suez canal make the Pacific route the more economical.

The War Department has, therefore, been constrained to deny these requests, and to bring the volunteers home by the Pacific route. As a majority of the volunteers are from the West, they will also have a shorter railroad journey before them when they land in San Francisco.

Gen. Lawton has established a Filipino government at Balinay, a council composed of Filipinos, and a mayor being elected. Americans are not to be held responsible for remuneration to the officials. To such an extent as the natives conduct their affairs in a manner the Americans consider proper, they will not be interfered with. This has been promised them. A portion of the Filipinos are satisfied with this, and have commenced to cultivate their fields. Those in that city who were unwilling to submit to foreign rule have largely become weary of the war and sick of slaughter and have laid down their arms.

Gen. Lawton is giving a cordial welcome to the Filipinos returning from the north and coming into the protection of the Americans. Many natives are getting food supplies from the rebel stores taken at Balinag by Gen. Lawton. Aguinaldo's power is reported to be weakening continually. The returning insurgents are made to understand that they will be accorded kind and just treatment.

FOUR REGIMENTS FOR MANILA.

These Will Enable Otis to Send Home the Volunteers.

The War Department is preparing to send four regiments of regulars to Manila by way of New York City and the Suez canal, utilizing for the purpose of transports Thomas, Meade and Logan, which are to be permanently transferred from the Atlantic to the Pacific fleet. They are expected to transport the Seventh and Nineteenth regiments of infantry and the First and Seventh regiments of artillery. The Seventh infantry is now distributed at posts east of the Missouri, the Nineteenth is in Porto Rico, the Seventh artillery is along the Atlantic coast north of Washington and the First is in the coast defense south of the Chesapeake and along the gulf.

The project to send these regiments by way of New York City and Suez is based on considerations similar to those which governed the War Department in sending the Grant, the Sherman and the Sheridan by that route. The expense of transportation of the troops by rail across the continent, amounting to $30,000 a regiment, is saved and the transports are sent to the Pacific, where they are most needed, as few Cuban or Porto Rican garrisons will require much moving about for a long time to come.

On the Pacific coast two more regiments, the Sixth and Sixteenth infantry, will start for Manila this month. It is believed that Gen. Otis will soon be in position to begin sending home the volunteers from the Philippines by every available steamer, as important re-enforcements are about due to reach him. These consist of a regular infantry regiment and eleven batteries of artillery.

WAR NEWS IN BRIEF.

Filipino riflemen to the number of 8,000 are intrenched on three sides of Cacolor.

The insurgents succeeded in landing ten machine guns at Capiz, on the island of Panay.

McArthur's troops are considerably enervated by the heat and the fatigue of the campaign.

The insurgents of the province of Cavite are preparing to make a desperate resistance to the Americans.

Gen. Luna massed his army east of the railway, bringing up troops by trainloads in sight of the American lines.

A reconnoitering party, sent out by Gen. Lawton, discovered the insurgents strongly intrenched at San Ildefonso, nine miles north of Balinag.

During the afternoon of Monday Gen. Mascardo, with a large retinue of officers, rode along the lines, frequently stopping to harangue his warriors.

The transport Hancock, with the Twenty-fifth United States infantry, numbering 1,400 men, arrived at Manila from San Francisco Thursday morning. The arrival of the Hancock was timely, as fresh troops were needed to relieve the exhausted men of Gen. MacArthur's command.

EDWARD ATKINSON.

Noted Economist Who Has Come Into Conflict with the Government.

Edward Atkinson, the celebrated Boston economist who by his anti-imperial propaganda has come into conflict with the Federal Government, has for years been famous as a writer on economic topics. He is a native of Brookline, Mass., is 72 years old and lives in Boston. Mr. Atkinson is vice-president of the Anti-Imperialist League and is really at the head of the objectors to the administration's Philippine policy. He has preached the anti-expansion policy and has sent circulars to the soldiers in the Philippines. Mr. Atkinson, in his pamphlet, urges "the youth of the land to avoid disease in the tropics by refusing to enlist or volunteer in the army or navy of the United States," and goes on to say that "the way will be found for the volunteers, now held against their will, to get their release from unlawful service."

These circulars have been pronounced seditious and traitorous by President McKinley and his cabinet, who say the purpose of the anti-imperialists is to incite mutiny among the soldiers, thus interfering with the Government's work, and to foment insurrection among the Filipinos. The circulars were seized at San Francisco by order of the Postmaster General.

SPRING PLOWING VERY LATE.

Result of Returns Furnished to the Department of Agriculture.

The May returns to the statistician of the Department of Agriculture show the acreage in winter wheat in cultivation on May 1 to have been about 25,900,000 acres. This is about 4,000,000 acres less than the area estimated to have been sown last fall, but it still slightly exceeds the area of winter wheat harvested last year. The reduction in acreage in the principal States, as compared with the area seeded last fall, is as follows:

Kansas, 868,000; Illinois, 761,000; Indiana, 394,000; Missouri, 345,000; Texas, 227,000; Ohio, 149,000; Nebraska, 144,000; Michigan, 128,000; Wisconsin, 120,000; Tennessee, 105,000.

The condition in the principal States, after reducing the acreage as indicated, is as follows:

Pennsylvania, 86; Maryland, 83; Virginia, 78; Texas, 67; Tennessee, 78; Kentucky, 76; Ohio, 82; Michigan, 60; Indiana, 68; Illinois, 54; Missouri, 65; Kansas, 64; California, 96; Oklahoma, 86.

Spring plowing is unusually late in almost every part of the country. The work already done is estimated at 57.2 per cent of the total contemplated. The proportion usually done by May 1 is about 75 per cent of the whole.

A CONFERENCE ON TRUSTS.

Four Days' Session to Be Held in Chicago This Summer.

A national conference on trusts and combinations will be held in Chicago during the coming summer. The Civic Federation of the city has been fostering the scheme for some time. The plan is to gather together a body of men from all sections of the country who will reflect the views of labor, commerce, political economy, law, trade, and in fact of all the varied industrial, educational and professional elements on the latest and greatest of national questions.

The intention is to hold a four days' conference, one day being devoted to railroad combinations, one to labor organizations, one to industrial combinations and one to remedies and to methods of procedure. One of the most important questions to be discussed will be that involving the jurisdiction of the various States and the Federal Government in the disposition of this issue. The courts have held both ways, and if light is needed on any point the investigators of the trust say it is this one. For this reason the Governors and Attorneys General of all the States will be asked to be present to give their views. Leading corporation lawyers and professors of political economy are also expected.

WIND AND WATER RAGE.

Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska Towns Seriously Damaged.

Tornadoes swept the Kansas towns of Coldwater, Lexington and Ashland Tuesday night. In Coldwater a dozen houses were wrecked. Joseph Bowers was killed and a half dozen persons were injured. Aldrich's general store was wrecked, brick block on Main street blown down. The Presbyterian Church was blown away and the court house was unroofed. A terrible windstorm in Ellis County picked up a stretch of wire fence a quarter of a mile long, carried it three miles and wrapped it securely around the steeple of the Mungor Catholic Church.

A great amount of rain, amounting almost to a deluge, fell Tuesday night in northwestern Nebraska, from which no fatalities have resulted so far as can be heard, but which has destroyed a considerable amount of property, especially on lowland farms, the Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis and Omaha and the Pacific Short Line railways being also large losers. The town of Homer was the principal sufferer. At Winnebago agency the storm was accompanied by enormous hail. At Colburn Junction the wind was cyclonic. A strip of seventy feet of track between the Junction and Pender was torn from the right of way.

THE COMPLAINERS.

And other dogs heard the little dog bay,
And, smiling, each trotted upon his way,
Thinking, "What a fool is there!"

But fate didn't seem to care;

THE MIDDY'S CAPTIVE

I.

"Blubbering won't do any good; you had better report the matter to Captain Wilson at once," said the navigating lieutenant of her majesty's ship Triumph, as he gazed quizzingly down at the chubby-faced midshipman who stood in such comical dismay before his superior officer. "Come with me; I'm going to his stateroom now," the speaker added, not unkindly, as he noted the lad's evident distress.

"I'm not blubbering, and I don't care if he does stop my leave!" indignantly responded the youngster, drawing himself up to his full height.

"What is it, Stuart?" inquired the captain, as the twain entered his cabin.

"I merely wish to say that we are ready to get under way whenever you please, sir; but Robson has a report to make," said the lieutenant.

"Not seasick yet, I hope?" ejaculated Captain Wilson, ironically. "Well, I'm listening."

"Please, sir, it's the 'First Lord'; he's bolted! He ran off while we were shipping the soft tack—I mean the bread!" incoherently stammered Robson.

"The 'First Lord' bolted with the soft tack!" exclaimed Wilson in astonishment. "What does he mean, Stuart? Who's the 'First Lord'? Is the boy a raving maniac?"

Lieut. Stuart had perforce to explain that the cadet, being in charge of a boat sent ashore to ship provisions, had lost one of his men—an able-bodied seaman answering to the name of West, but who was, by reason of his superior bearing, nicknamed by his companions "the First Lord of the Admiralty."

Charley Robson meekly endured the reproaches of his commander, who was a stern martinet, and made no allowance for youthful inexperience. "But at any rate," mused the young fellow when he was at length dismissed, "he said nothing about stopping my furlough." And then his volatile spirits threw off the recent discomfiture as only youth knows how to, while his thoughts wandered far away to that pleasant country home in Surrey, with all its attendant attractions, from which he had been separated for one long year. And if among the dream faces conjured up there was one which eclipsed all others, the fact should not cause undue surprise.

The usual steps taken to secure the arrest of the deserter were of no avail. His description was circulated by the police throughout the country, and all the majesty of the law invoked to capture the runaway, but the man disappeared as completely as if the earth had opened and swallowed him up. He was of a strangely reserved nature, mixed but little with his companions, and had evidently once occupied a far superior situation in life.

There was one person, however, who did not forget the runaway. Robson often in imagination ran the scoundrel to earth.

Little did Charley Robson imagine as at the commencement of his long deferred leave he lounged in a first-class smoker on his way to Guilford how soon, or under what strange circumstances he would meet the villain of his melodrama.

"And you have come home, Alice will be able to resume her interrupted country walks," said the mother of the youthful sailor next morning. "But of course," added she, addressing the girl, "Charlie has not heard of your latest admirer. I don't know whether the girl's nerves are out of order," continued Mrs. Robson, "but she declares that a strange man has been following her about during the last few weeks, although no one else has caught a glimpse of him."

"I shan't be afraid of any loafers while Charlie is with me," responded the maiden. "In proof of which, he shall convoy me for a walk now." And Alice Westerne buoyantly danced off to array herself for the proposed jaunt.

The eyes of the mother and son followed the girl with a wistful look as she quitted the room.

"I suppose nothing has been heard of him?" queried the latter.

"No! Your father thinks there never will be. Doubtless Sir Richard died abroad, believing to the end that he was a murderer!"

"And Allie is still ignorant of her father's sad history?" queried the lad.

"Yes. We have decided not to say anything to her until she is of age, unless some contingency should arise, such as your obtaining a sublieutenancy, and being of the same mind as you are now."

Robson colored at the hint delicately conveyed by his mother, and so well understood by himself. To see their only son mated to their ward was the dearest wish of Admiral and Mrs. Robson, yet they had the good sense to restrain the impetuosity of the youthful couple until both arrived at years of maturity.

II.

With the course of true love running thus smoothly, and the crisp, frozen ground under their feet, the twain started upon their ramble.

With buoyant steps they breasted the "Hog's Back," from which favorite vantage ground a splendid view of the surrounding country could be obtained.

"Yes, there's the dear old Towers," said Alice, "where I should be living now if the pater had not died."

"You've found another home," whispered Charley, "and other parents."

"I know that, dear," responded the girl. "But you cannot imagine what it feels like to have one's birth place given over to ruin and decay, and to know one hasn't a single living relative. Only to think I cannot even visit my father's grave, because he died in some far away outlandish place!" Then, with returning vivacity, she added: "Don't you remember that day in your school holidays when we walked over there and rembled through the disused rooms? How we thought there was a ghost in the hall, and ran all the three miles back home without once stopping?"

"I should just think I did," said the young officer. "You caught a chill through being overheated, and the governor said he would make a sailor of me for being such an idiot."

"You wouldn't be afraid now?" queried the girl.

"No fear!" laughed her companion. "Life on a man-of-war soon knocks all the fear of spooks out of a man."

"Let us pay another visit, then!"

A sharp walk soon brought the twain to the rusty lodge-gates of Westerne Towers.

"How dreary it looks!" said the girl. "I wonder if that scullery window is still unfastened?"

Charley tried, and to his surprise the sash slipped up without difficulty. "It's a case of gentlemen first this time," said he, stepping through the aperture. "Come along, tomboy. If you're not careful you'll tear your dress. The window's no bigger than the lubber-hole of a brig."

The casement being negotiated in sefety, together they wandered through the cobweb-festooned rooms of the once-palatial residence. Ascending to a second story, Robson carelessly threw open a door of a room which faced the landing. Here an unexpected sight met his gaze. Sitting before a wood fire was an elderly man, contemplating the flames with a ruminant air. At the sound they made he turned his face toward them and started in alarm.

The next moment the youth was across the room and grappling with the stranger. "You villain!" he panted, "I've got you at last! Run, Allie, bring some one quickly! I can't hold him long; say he's a deserter from the navy."

The trembling limbs of the girl failed to carry out his behests as she stood fascinated, watching the unequal struggle, which was speedily ended. Youth and agility were no match for the sailor's sinewy arms, and in a short time Robson was ignominiously pinned against the wall.

With lowering brows and eyes, which boded no good to his captive, West stood staring at the lad as if undecided what to do with him. Then, catching sight of the pale face of Alice, who was petrified with horror upon recognizing in her companion's antagonist the man who had so persistently dogged her footsteps of late, his own features assumed a softer expression, and he muttered: "It is kismet!"

After a pause of breathless silence the ex-sailor, addressing his captive, said: "You are not so muscular as was your father in his youth, young fellow. The Charley Robson that I knew would never have allowed an old man to get the better of him; but let that pass and come to the crux of the matter. You want to arrest me for deserting from the navy. Very well, you shall, if you still wish to after hearing what I have to say."

Releasing the grip upon his would-be captor, the elder man, in a strangely cultured voice, addressed his auditors.

"Years ago," said he, "I was known and respected in this neighborhood, a man of substance, and a member of the diplomatic corps. Unfortunately, in my official capacity, I became embroiled in a quarrel with a political opponent, and, as was more common even fifteen years ago, the result was I had no alternative between fighting a duel or being dishonored.

"Not to make a long story, my adversary and our seconds journeyed to Guildford with me late one night, intending to settle our differences at daybreak on the following morning. With the courtesy that such affairs demanded I offered the whole party hospitality for the night.

"From the moment my head touched the pillow until I was awakened the next morning my mind was an entire blank, but judge of my horror when, essaying to rise, I found the bedclothes dabbled with blood, and at the foot of my couch a gory hunting knife belonging to myself. Simultaneous with my horrible discovery the servant found the man I was to have fought lying foully murdered.

"Although conscious of my innocence I dared not face the inquiry which was sure to follow, as who would believe my own theory of the matter, which was simply that I committed the terrible act in my sleep, as from childhood I had been subject to attacks of somnambulism. Hastily caressing my infant daughter, the only pledge left me by my departed wife, I left the house like a felon and fled the country, and it was hunger for a glimpse of my dear child's face that has worked my undoing. My faithful secretary connived at my escape, and subsequently sent me the news of the charge of wilful murder against Sir Richard Westerne. Yes. You will be able to deliver up to justice a more important person than the deserter West. My devoted retainer Burton, who assisted me at such great risks to himself, is not here to help me now. He is dead."

"He was a villain, Sir Richard!" cried Robson, in wild excitement. "It was he himself who killed Lord Marcus and artfully foisted the blame upon you in order that you should not discover his defalcations. My father possesses his dying confession to that effect."

The sudden revulsion of feeling was almost too much for the baronet. Tottering to the nearest chair, he buried his face in his toil-worn hands. Silence reigned in the room for a few intense moments. Then Sir Richard, feeling a gentle hand upon his shoulder, looked up into a sweet but still scared face and two half-frightened gray eyes.

"Daddy, dear," Charley heard a tremulous voice murmur softly as he stole from the room. * * *

Powerful friends at the admiralty soon glossed over the delinquencies of the seaman West, and Sir Richard Westerne once more assumed his proper rank and station. As time wore on, and the vividness of his past misery faded, he could even afford to joke about the matter; and sometimes upon the rare occasions that he saw a certain young officer, would, much to the amusement of his daughter, simulate extreme terror and cry in affected dismay: "He has come for me at last!"

When some few years later a very excited youth, with a golden circlet upon the arm of his new uniform coat, burst unceremoniously into the room, he was greeted by the same old joke, and in response blushingly replied: "I'll let you off this time if you will give me Alice as a hostage." And as the girl seemed to be a willing sacrifice, Sir Richard gave them his blessing.

KITCHENER'S NERVE.

He Demanded Twenty-five Thousand Dollars from Lord Rothschild.

The other day some ladies wrote to Lord Kitchener suggesting that he should give some thought to the girls as well as to the boys of the Soudan. Thereupon the sirdar wrote the reply that when he had got his Gordon College working well for the boys he would think of the girls. Then came the characteristic addition that when that moment came he would not fail to call on these ladies for subscriptions to help him in the work. Which reminds me of a story so like the man that it is worth telling. I may say that he tells it himself of himself with great gusto. When Kitchener was starting his list for the $500,000 he demanded for the Gordon College he was advised that the first and best step he could take was to atend a lunch in the city which Lord Rothschild would give. The lunch was duly ordered; the guests were met; the table set. In the middle there was an awkward pause. Lord Rothschild was observed to leave Lord Kitchner after a short conversation, and, as Lord Rothschilds face was somewhat flushed and his eyes shown brightly it was easily seen that the great banker was not pleased. And he wasn'a. For what had happened was this. Lord Kitchener, with that shrewd sense he has—especially where money is concerned—saw that the amount of the subscriptions of others would largely depend on the amount with which Lord Rothschild would start the list. He fixed the amount in his own mind at $25,000. When Lord Rothschild came up to him Kitchener asked, with characteristic bluntness, what amount he wished to subscribe. "Five thousand dollars," replied Lord Rothschild, a little taken back. "I want $25,000," said Kitchener, "and, moreover, unless I get it I shan't stay to lunch." Lord Rothschild is generous—the generosity of the family is as well known, indeed, as its wealth—but a stand and deliver message of this kind was something more than even the most generous of men would like. And that was why Lord Rothschild looked angry.

The news spread through the room; surprise and horror were on every face and several of the distinguished guests went up to Kitchener to remonstrate, Wolseley at the head. They might as well have talked to the Egyptian sphinx. "Twenty-five thousand dollars or I go,' said Kitchener. He got the $25,000 with the result he had anticipated—four other multi-millionaires had to follow Lord Rothschild's example, and when the lunch was over the subscription for the Gordon College was well started with $125,000.

Destroying the Sources of Rubber.

The consumption of india rubber has grown enormously in recent years. The trade has been stimulated chiefly by the use of pneumatic tires on bicycles. Several years ago it began to be evident that unless wasteful and destructive methods of collecting rubber were discontinued the supply would diminish while the demand was increasing. Government after Government has therefore prohibited or restricted the collection of rubber in its territory in order to give the plants time to multiply and recuperate. The Congo Free State has now gone a step further. In addition to its decree of 1892, still in force, which made it a serious and punishable offence to kill the rubber plant or to gather rubber in any way except through incisions in the bark, it is now made obligatory to plant at least 150 vines or trees for every ton of rubber collected. Infractions of the new decree are punishable by fine up to $2,000, or imprisonment. A Bureau of Control of Rubber Forests has been appointed to guard the rubber interests of the State and to enforce the decrees of 1892 and 1899.

It is necessary to kill the camphor tree in order to get camphor, but it is not necessary to kill any of the varieties of trees and vines that yield rubber to collect their juice; and yet this inexcusably stupid and wasteful method has been employed in many countries with the result that rubber plants have been exterminated in hundreds of thousands of square miles of territory.—New York Sun.

A Contractionist.

"It is hard to get ahead of that daughter of mine," said the portly man who fully realizes that he was once young himself.

"Last night I had occasion to go into the drawing-room. The light was turned down and I almost stumbled over my daughter and her best young man, who were sitting very close to each other on the sofa. I shouldn't have minded that so much if I hadn't discovered that the young man had his arm around my daughter's waist.

"What does this mean?" I demanded sternly, although I felt more like laughing to see the young man drop all proceedings.

"'Why, papa,' my daughter replied innocently, 'we were talking about political matters, and I asked Mr. Brown if he was an expansionist, and he said he wasn't. More than that, he was an out-and-out contractionist. Then he illustrated his meaning, and I was so interested that I got caught within the zone of contraction.'

"There's going to be a wedding up at my house some day, but I don't think the young man fully realizes the treasure he is getting."—Detroit Free Press.

A Railway to Run Through Sahara.

A French company has been organized with the approval of the government to construct a railway line through the desert of Sahara from the Mediterranean coast to the Gulf of Guinea. The northern terminus will be Tunis, and the line will run due south a distance of about 2,000 miles to the Niger territory, and then eastward to the French portion of the Congo valley. The cost is estimated at $50,000,000.

The assessed valuation of Boston is $1,036,690,758, and the value of the property exempt from taxation is $172,678.

FRED FUNSTON.

IN REPLY to a telegram from a Chicago paper inquiring "What's the matter with Funston?" William Allen White, editor of the Emporia (Kansas) Gazette and writer of the famous editorial, "What's the Matter with Kansas?" wired the following:

I have known Fred Funston for about fifteen years; went to Kansas State University with him, where we had a slow mule race for the foot of every class. Afterward we roomed together while working for Kansas City papers. He is not afraid of anything that can talk. Once in school the town's "bad coon" tried to run over Funston. The darky weighed 200 pounds, and was a "scrapper" with a razor record. Funston is 5 feet 3 and weighs about 95. He "bluffed" the "colored brother" to a standstill and went for a warrant and marched the boss bully through the main streets of Lawrence at the point of a gun. Once when he was a Santa Fe train conductor he threw an obstreperous cowboy down in the middle of a car aisle, took the cowboy's gun away, pounded him up with it, threw him off the train and chased him half a mile down the track, throwing ballast at him. Funston was in Alaska four years ago, and he took a longer trip in the middle of the dark arctic winter with only Indian guides than Peary took in Greenland in the light of summer. There is absolutely nothing the matter with Funston, and what is more, there are several hundred other young fellows in Kansas made of the same stuff.

Three years ago Funston went to Cuba. In his travels he had come across the junta and soon became imbued with a desire to do battle under the lone star flag. To think is to act with him. He sailed away in a filibustering vessel, was landed near Matanzas and joined Maceo. He was familiar with arms of all kinds and soon wore the stars of a colonel of cavalry.

He had a bunch of irrepressibles with him and they did excellent service.

He raided the country to within sight of Havana and when the Spaniards bore down upon the Cubans Funston's raiders held the rear guard. They stood off Blanco's veterans until the great chieftain could escape to the hills. They were in every skirmish and were terrors to the foe. When the mulatto general fell and his forces were scattered the raiders went with them. Funston had a hard time of it dodging the enemy, but luck was with him and he reached his native land, a war veteran months before the nation decided to take a hand.

With the outbreak of war he was offered and accepted a staff commission by one of the officers of rank. Governor Stanley of Kansas raised a regiment of volunteers in addition to the national guard and called it the Twentieth Kansas. He offered the command to Fred Funston, who accepted and, when the regiment was ordered to the far east he hastened to assume command. Since then the name of Fred Funston has been mentioned in the dispatches more frequently than that of any officer, regular or volunteer, who is in the Philippines or who fought at Santiago.

Actual warfare had scarcely commenced in Luzon until the world began to realize that Kansas produces something besides grasshoppers and high winds. The Filipinos had not fallen back into their second line of trenches until the world was made aware that the Twentieth Kansas had driven them out of their first. "Colonel Funston with a handful of the Kansas regiment" went out and got them. A forward movement was determined on, the jayhawker colonel and his willing followers were in the van.

Lloyd Wheaton, a veteran of many a battle on the frontier, started to whip Aguinaldo out of Malolos. His column, called the flying column, was detached from MacArthur's division and projected northwestward from the defenses before Manila. Funston, of course, was in this flying column, for speed, decision, skill and pluck were needed; he has them all and his men have also. Wheaton succeeded in his object. Every paper in the land printed his picture, but beside it could be seen the boyish face of the Kansan, covered by a soft brown beard of recent growth.

Then MacArthur started up the country to whale Aguinaldo out of his boots. He took Wheaton, Hale, Otis and had Hall in reserve. The four columns marched away, regulars brigaded with Funston's raw levies. They fought their way through jungles and over frightfully rough country, but they advanced. A river, supposed to be impassable, was met with not far from Malolos; Funston and half a company of his men swam over and kicked several hundreds of Filipinos out of the trenches.

Those who have sat in admiration of the exploits of the gallant Kansas officer have probably not realized what this swimming of rivers in Luzon means. All, of course, are aware that the deeds were accomplished in the face of a determined fire. But who has stopped to think or realize that the rivers of that archipelago are thronged with huge man-eating crocodiles? Men soon learn to face a storm of bullets and even joke about them. But the world has few men who would be willing to face the prospect of furnishing a meal to a hungry crocodile. Yet this is what that youth from Kansas has done more times than the cablegrams show.

Since the boys from the West faced the night attack of Augusti at Malate, delivered in the throes of a frightful storm; since the gallant men from Gopherdom and Sandburrville turned back the exultant don, making seeming victory, sweet because of the awful slaughter of Cavite, the bitterness of abject repulse and defeat, the world has realized that the wind-swept plains of the West produce something more desirable than atmospheric disturbances. Since the men who follow the figure 20 on the broad blue banner of Funston's regiment have taken to swimming crocodile-infested rivers that they may mingle with Filipinos the world has taken a sudden interest in sunflowers.

This interest is not born of estheticism; it is a virile, manly interest. It means that if Kansas can produce a regiment of such sunflowers then Kansas deserves to stand well up at the head of the list of States. No State in the Union—with one possible exception—has cause to blush when the names of her soldiers are mentioned. This applies not only to the present, but all other conflicts. All have won honor and fame for self-sacrifice, daring and devotion. But of all the names which have won added luster since the first shot was fired none shines so brightly as that of Fred Funston. No regiment has a record more fully complete with military glory than his.

A LEITER ON THE STAGE.

Society Woman Trying to Earn a Living for Herself and Her Husband.

Mrs. T. Benton Leiter, niece of Levi Z. Leiter, the Chicago millionaire, and herself a popular member of Chicago society, has gone on the stage. It isn't love of applause or a theatrical ambition that led her to adopt the profession, but the necessity of earning a living for herself and her paretic husband. The latter is a cousin of Joe Leiter and of Lady Curzon, the vice reine of India. Mrs. Leiter is a woman of education and culture. She has written several stories for children, which are meritorious.

Her husband for years held a responsible position with his millionaire uncle. He was a hard and close worker and was busy from morning till night in attending to his uncle's affairs.

INDIANA'S LOST RIVER.

Breaks Out on Surface in Spots and Then Disappears.

Geological explorations and recent floods have brought to light many interesting facts concerning the "lost rivers" of Indiana and lead to the belief that hundreds of feet under the ground in the State great rivers are gushing toward the sea, appearing at the surface here and there in Southern Indiana to again lose themselves farther on. The most wonderful of the surface indications are found in the southwestern portion of the State, says a correspondent of the Chicago Inter Ocean, especially in the vicinity of Orange County, where the famous Lost river is formed by a half dozen of the world's most wonderful creeks and brooks.

Lost river rises all of a sudden in Washington County. It rather gushes from a bank a full-sized river, and after running a mile or so, as suddenly disappears from view. Near Orleans it suddenly sinks into a great cavernous hole. The passage is black and unfathomable, and even in the dryest seasons it never has been explored. A mile from the first sink a stream again breaks forth from the side of a bluff, and it has been established beyond all doubt that this is a continuation of the famous Lost river. After running through a natural bed for a distance of two miles it again disappears. Eight miles southwest it comes to the surface as abruptly to flow on for another mile or so, and then disappears in another sink. It gushes forth again from another bluff, and continues as a modest, unassuming, every-day stream to its junction with White river a few miles distant. There are indications that at one time in the past there was a regular surface bed over which the stream flowed. But this bed is now dry and overgrown with trees and briers. Still during the freshet seasons the underground caverns are evidently overtaxed, and the overflow continues over the old bed to the second sink, and then to the third and the fourth, and then joins the lost stream.

INDIANA'S LOST RIVER.
Dotted lines indicate the parts of the stream that have disappeared.

But Lost river is simply the parent of numerous remarkable surface and subterranean streams. A year ago it was found that there was a subterranean stream running under Rush County, almost seventy-five miles northeast. It was discovered in a rather remarkable way. William Barlow was drilling a deep well at Moscow, in Orange Township, a few feet from the banks of Flatrock creek. All at once the drill penetrated a cavern, and after it was withdrawn a roaring sound could be heard. An investigation was made with a sounding line. At a depth of 100 feet the line was caught in a remarkably swift current, which carried the plumet along with so much force as to make it difficult to reel the line in. Since then the hole has been lighted, and it is found that the subterranean stream flows over a bed of the whitest rock, washed smooth and polished by the friction of the water passing over it for thousands of years. Scientists now believe that this stream is what is later Lost river. It evidently flows from the northeast for a great distance, possibly rising in Ohio or in the St. Lawrence arch.

At English, Ind., a recent flood resulted in the discovery of another lost river. A new cavern was opened by the water in Crawford County. By placing one's ear to the opening the gush and roar of water may be heard underground. It is also headed toward the point where Lost river makes its appearance. Reports from various sections of the southern counties show that similar underground streams are found at various points.

Of the surface tributaries to Lost river, the most remarkable is known as Stamper creek, which gushes from the side of a bluff near Millersburg. It has a wild current, which carries everything with it to a sinkhole a mile distant. No one knows exactly where it comes out, but it is thought to again make its appearance at Spring Mills, six miles north. Here Lick creek bursts out of the base of a hill just in the rear of the mill. Tests made by passing sawdust and wooden balls into the sink of Stamper creek tend to prove that it and Lick creek are the same stream. Further down it again disappears from the surface for a mile or two, and then comes up and flows to New Prospect, where it empties into Lost river.

Another of the interesting tributaries of Lost river is French Lick creek, which rises abruptly in Orange County and, after flowing northwest through French Lick and West Baden Springs resorts, also disappears several times, running underground a mile or more once or twice, to appear farther north and join Lost river just before it empties into a sink. There are several other surface feeders to Lost river which have the same peculiarity, and near them are found many caverns, in several of which are subterranean streams filled with eyeless fish and animals. In some of these caves the streams have a swift current and are evidently part of the Lost river system; in others the streams have a sluggish course and are plainly of an entirely different subterranean system.

That the Lost river had the peculiarity—which was indicated by the Indians giving it that name—prior to the advent of the red man in this country is shown by the mammoth mounds and earthworks built along its course by moundbuilders who flourished and passed away before the Indian came. The finest mounds north of the Ohio river are found along its course and near the great sinks.

Experience is a teacher of mankind; and some men will learn of no other.

MANILA LETTER.

MANILA, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,
April 7, 1899.

DEAR SISTER AND ALL:—I wrote you some time ago, will drop you another line or so for its too long to wait for an answer and you can do the same. Writ when ever you can and I will do the same. Am feeling pretty good since I came over here. Have had some hard fighting and have ben hit once since I came in the army, isn't a bad wound though. We are doing police duty since March 25, in the city of Manila. Have had some street fights with the natives. But I believe I would rather fight Spaniards than these natives, they are a mean set of people, we have had boys stabbed in the back by them. I shot one the other night in a window trying to get inside. We have about 500 to guard in the prison. The climate is better than in Cuba. There is a great deal of small pox and dysentary here, but no yellow fever. There is a good deal of rheumatism. My partner that was with me on General Bate's guard in Cuba got killed in the battle of Pasig City last week, we had 5 killed and 27 wounded. It may be that I will get transferred back to the States for the rest of my time out if I can't stand the climate. Well I guess that is all, so good by for this time. Write as often as you can and don't wait for an answer and I will do the same, it takes a letter 35 days to go. Send me some papers whenever you can, for they are a scarce article here. Love to all.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES

Duties Under Reform Laws Defined by the Attorney General

Attorney General Taylor has given out the following opinion as to the duties of township Trustees under the reform laws now in force:

1. Township Trustees should report to the Board of County Commissioners all their doings up to the 28th day of April, 1899, when the Act of 1899 went into effect.

2. From the 28th day of April, 1899, Township Trustees should report all their doings to the township Advisory Borad at its annual meeting, on the first Tuesday of September next.

3. The act of 1897, providing for the reporting to the Board of County Commissioners was specifically repealed by the reform bill of 1899.

4. From the 28th day of April, 1899, all estimates, contracts, expenditures and reports of Township Trustees are governed by the Acts of 1899.

5. Since the first Annual meeting of the Township Advisory Board do not convene until the first Tuesday in September, the provisions concerning estimates to be made are not applicable to Township Trustees between the taking effect of said law and the first Tuesday in September, 1899. While this is true, still the Township Trustees must on the first day of September next, report to such Township Advisory Boards respectively, all contracts made and expenditures incurred, and these will be subject to the approval of such Advisory Boards at their annual meetings on the first day of next September.

What Shall We Do?

A serious and dangerous disease prevails in this country, dangerous because so deceptive. It comes on so slowly yet surely that it is often firmly seated before we are aware of it.

The name of this disease which may be divided into three distinct stages is, First, Kidney tronble, indicated by pain in the back, lumbago, frequent desire to urinate, the flow of urine being copious or scant with strong odor.

If allowed to advance, this reaches the Second stage, or Bladder trouble, with heavy pain in the abdomen low down between the naval and the water passage, increasing desire to urinate, with scalding sensation in passing, small quantities being passed with difficulty, sometimes necessary to draw it with instruments. If uric acid or gravel has formed it will prove dangerous if neglected.

The third stage is Bright's disease.

There is comfort in knowing that Dr. Killmer, the great Kidney and Bladder specialist, has discovered a Remedy famous for its marvelous cure of the most distressing cases and known as Dr. Kilmer,s Swamp-Root.

It is sold by all druggists.

As a proof of the wonderful virtues of this great discovery, Swamp.Root, a sample bottle and a book of valuable information will be sent absolutely free by mail on agplication to Dr. Kilmer & Co.. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this liberal offer in the AUAURN COURIER.

CLUB NOTES

The L. L. C. met with Mrs. Swineford last Saturday. The attendance was not as good as usual owing no doubt to the many other meetings taking place on the same day. The subject for the day was Auburn and was set apart by the program committee as "Auburn Day," the first paper was given by Mrs. Swineford entitled "Pioneers of Auburn," and was of great interest to all but more especially those who had spent most of their lives in this place. She gave a brief notice to many of our older citizens and recalled the changes in many of the localities of our little city. The next paper, "Auburn's churches and schools," was to have been given by Mrs. Julia Hodge, but as she was not present, it was necessarialy postponed, "Literary Auburn," was given by Mrs. Emanuel in a carefully prepared paper and was full of interest as it recalled to mind the many literary clubs that had at different times had an existence in Auburn. Not forgetting in a very modest way to say that the L. L. C. was the oldest oaganization of this kind in this north eastern part of the state that has had a continuous existence, having just celebrated its 17th anniversary. She called attention to the fact that in all these years but one death had occurred among the membership. Mrs. E. D. Hartman, who was one of the organizers and the first President. Current News followed and the club adjourned to meet next Saturday at the home of Mrs. McCord, and to be the guests of Mrs. McCord, Mrs. Guild and Mrs. Zimmerman for the afternoon and to remain for tea, an invitation that was gladly accepted. Josie Klotz of Van Wert O., was a visitor at the club.

His Life Was Saved.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says; "I was taken with Typhoid Fever, that ran into Pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave me great relief. I continued to use it, and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure for all Throat and Lung Trouble. Regular size 50 cents and $1. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's Drug Store: every bottle guaranteed.

From Puget Sound

JUNCTION CITY, WASH., May 7, '99.

EDITOR COURIER:—There lies to the westward of our place a detached spur the Olympic range, called Mt. Cathem. Standing out on a peninsula as it does, its lofty top furnishes the best outlook in the northwest. Last Sunday in company with two others we decamped early in the day for the top of the famous mountain. For the first three miles we skirted the outlying foothills on well traveled hunters trails, until we reached the base of the mountain proper. Then the hard work of the trip began. Up over huge boulders, overgrown with small hemlock and wild blackberry vines, interspersed with Oregon grape and Sallel berries. The mist that hung over the valley lifted and drifted away toward the eastward, and a gentle breeze from the Pacific set in. The climbing was slow and difficult, often reaching a shelving rock where we halt for a short rest and again press onward. Ever and anon we are saluted by the shriek of the wild goose and the sand hill crane as they pass us by in their flight to the wild North Land, where they rear their young and return in the fall to gormandize on the great wheat fields of the far famed California valleys. As for insect life on these mountain heights there seems to be an absolute dearth. Not a winged creature, not a crawling insect to break the profound stillness that reigns in this great wilderness. Further up we pass a little stream of water gushes forth from the mountain side. As there is no lake or other water supply further up, it is a puzzling question where the water comes from. But must not tarry too long on the assent as greater wonders await us above. The sun gets hotter and the ascent more difficult and the perspiration oozes from every pore. My comrades lagged and began to wish they were at home. At last we reached a perpendicular granite wall where further progress seemed to an end. But not to be stopped by the last impediment, we climbed carefully to seaward where we were astonished to find an oval cave about twelve feet in extent with the rock floor lined with bones of various kinds of small animals. As I wondered over this sepulcher of the dead. I could see in imagination the tragic scenes here enacted. The den seems to be that of a panther. After an extremely difficult climb to the eastward, we found a more gentle slope which we followed to the extreme summit. Oh, had I the gift to properly describe this wondrous scene. But my pen must fail to do full justice to the grand panorama that opens to us on every side. The sun was now high in the Heavens and the sky altogether cloudless, a beautiful day.

Far away perhaps a hundred miles to the eastward shining like burnished silver in the bright sunlight, stretches the snow covered Cascade range. From the southeast domes up Mount Rainier, towering over fourteen thousand feet in the blue vault, being by far the highest peak in the northwest, containing the only live volcanic fires in the United States proper. Cold and silent surrounded by a snowy waste to the northwest stands Mount Baker. I believe that no one has yet stood upon its snowy summit, although many attempts have been made to reach that land of everlasting snow. Between the Cascades and us lies Puget Sound with its various ramifications spread out at our feet like a map on the glassy bosom of this inland sea unruffled by the winds that sweep the Pacific, dotted by many stately ships and steamboats carrying our products to all the world.

To the north lies the archipelago DeHaro, the thousand islands set like gems in a silvery sea. A scene so beautiful that it will never fade from the mind. Across the straits of Fuca we can see the city of Victoria, the gem of the northern seas, and the capital of British Columbia. Port Townsend, the sleeping beauty, lies close at our feet sleeping but not dead. To the west and south stretches away to the Pacific the great unknown land whose impenetrable wastes have never been trod by the foot of man. Range upon range peak upon peak, are piled high, wild and sublime. This is the true American wonderland, the darkest spot on American soil, but the sinking sun warns us to retreat to our homes which we can see nestled in the bosom of the quiet valley at our feet, and to the readers of the COURIER we bid you a kindly good night.

Yours Truly.
JOSEPH A. SHADE.

Gypsy Romance.

CHAPTER VI.

We had left Lee Campbell and Dora Green, now at the home of Lee's father, when we finished chapter five. This interesting pair have been making it lively for the people in the east part of the county

D. D. Diehl of Butler says a half has not been told. But there is one episode not yet given out, that shows the real side of the ordinary gypsy. Having failed to show up on her other property matters she still claimed to have a couple of thousand in the First National Bank at Auburn. So a few days ago after a pretty hot quarrel with her latest husband, they started on foot for Auburn to get the money. Some distance from the home of the Campbells they stopped on a rise of ground and called back. Campbell's mother heard them and asked as to what they wanted. The gypsy woman replied that they wanted to talk with her, and as it was a sign of bad luck to turn back she wanted Mrs. Campbell to come to them. So the old lady came, when Dora told her she was going to Auburn to get her money at the Auburn bank, but as it might happen the bank would give her the money in almost any shape, she would need a sack, one some what larger than a salt sack. She arranged with Mrs. Campbell for the latter to go back to the house and make a sack of strong muslin with strings to draw it together at the top. Then she and Campbell sat down and waited till the old lady had made the sack and brought it to them. Then they started off on foot for Auburn. They are supposed to be now in Garrett, where it is rumored he had applied for work. Old Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have lost a good deal of faith in the Romany folks.

The Townshp S. S. Institute

The Union Township Sabbath School Institute which was held Saturday afternoon and evening was full of interest and well attended. The discussion, "What is the greatest need of your Sunday School?" was opened by W. Pepple, Superintendent of Union Chapel Sunday school; followed by Rev. Henry Arlen, Rev. Engleman, Mrs. Julia Hodge and Mr. Charles Eckhart. The discussion also embraced the other topic on the program, "How can you best induce the regular attendance of the teachers?"

A vocal solo was given by Mrs. Lena Patterson. A review of the lesson just passed in this quarter was given by Mrs. Ehlers. in the absence of Mrs. I. M. Thomas who was to have given the work. Mrs. J. A Barns gave a review of the remaining lessons of the quarter. "How to study the Bible" was the subject of a short talk by Rev. T. M. Guild. He gave many helpful and practical suggestions. Mrs Stacy favored the institute with a beautiful solo.

In the evening the devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Engleman. The address of the evening was given by Rev. Henry Arlen of the Presbyterian church, and contained many truths; the subjecs was "Temperance." The duet by Mrs. Cuppy and Mrs. Stamets was exceptionally sweet. The solo by Mrs. Engleman was appreciated by all, and the closing musical number was by Mrs, Clara Stacy touched every heart present with both words and melody. It was the ever sweet song, Ninety and nine.

A talk by Mrs. Ehlers closed the evening session, which taken all in all was a successful one.

Who Can Beat This?

Joseph Strouse, of Keyser, was in town today and brought in his season's clip of wool, nine fleeces in all, the total weight being ninety-nine pounds. For fear people would not believe this, he took a written statement from Schaab Brothers to this effect. He had been claiming he would have one hundred pounds, but is satisfied with ninety-nine. He does not know the breed of the sheep, but thinks the great yield due to good care and feeding. The flock came from two lambs sent to a Garrett railroad man from a friend at the Chicaga stockyards, for the former's children, and he got Mr. Strouse to take them to the farm.

COURT NEWS

The first part of the term is as usual given up to probate matters, calling up estates, etc. When this is over, there are a few criminal cases to dispose of.

Among the attorneys in court today, were W. H. Leas and C. M. Phillips, of Waterloo, L. J. Gengler and Howard Mountz, of Garrett, Ott Baxter and C. J. Coats, of Butler.

There is an unfinished case to come up this term from the Steuben court. It is that of the Inter-State Life Insurance Company vs Gilbert, which was begun at Angola, and there was not time to finish it. The late Mr. Gilbert had sent in an application to the company, but they had not accepted it, as they had learned he was not in sound health. They had so decided, but their clerks had by oversight signed the application as accepted and thereupon Mr. Gilbert had made at least one payment. He soon after died and the company refused to pay the loss. It will be seen that a nice legal point is to be settled.

After participating in a bountiful and luxurious feast the guests were assembled in the parlor to listen to an appropriate address by the Rev. Dingle, of Waterloo. He then presented to them some very beautiful presents which were the tokens of the love and esteem in which they are held by their children. Their friends and neighbors also presented to them a purse of silver as a token of their friendship. Mr. and Mrs. Metcalf then with a few and well chosen words thanked them all for their presents and the tokens of their respect. The affair was a surprise and a very aggreable one and all who were present went away, glad that they had been there.

POLYGAMY IN UTAH

RECENT events of national interest have awakened great public attention to the Mormons of Utah and the polygamous faith. The fight made against Congressman Roberts, the known possessor of three wives, has led to investigations that are likely to develop some sensational disclosures in the very near future, and authenticated details already made public indicate that the practice of plural marriage is still in vogue. Since the decree of 1890 this is considered bigamy, pure and simple. The wholesale promiscuous taking of wives, therefore, has been broken up, but many secret ways have been devised for evading the Federal prohibitory statute. The cupidity of leaders has operated to make easy the accomplishment of plural wife-getting, and Mormonism is dying a hard death.

The essence of the Mormon dogmas is contained in an avowed "spiritual revelation" given to Joseph Smith, leader of the Latter Day Saints, in 1843. The official Mormon ritual on the patriarchal order of marriage declares that a man may espouse a woman, and if she consents espouse another, and so on indefinitely. Since 1830 this doctrine has been advocated under difficulties. The Government has prosecuted all illegal marriage participants. However, a common way of having the civil rite performed is to elope to Mexico or Canada, or to sail out into the neutral waters of the high seas, where the marriage is performed. Then the couple will return to their Mormon homes, and in their temple of worship will be "sealed" in wedlock according to ritualistic customs of the church. It is in evidence that within the past year a number of the most prominent Mormons in Utah have violated the Federal statute, and have taken unto themselves additional wives. This seems to show that apparent submission to the law when first enacted was only a temporary public cessation in the traffic of wives, and the Government is making an active move to compel Utah to maintain her Statehood on constitutional lines.

In Chicago and other large cities, and in many rural communities, unusual activity of the Mormon missionaries has been noticed during the past year. As a result of this work there has recently been a decided influx of converts into the sequestered valleys of Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico, the headquarters of orthodox Mormonism. It is a heterogeneous mixture of humanity that the missionaries send back to the "fold," and a noticeable fact about the whole thing is that women predominate among the converts. Many reports from sections where Mormon missionaries have been at work show that the Latter Day Saints' emissaries have been driven out of the community, but in other instances they have gathered in converts, innocent and ignorant, beguiled by fatuous promises and deluded by specious representations regarding the religious aspect of the matter.

One hotbed of primitive Mormonism is still in existence. Ine the southern part of Utah the polygamous practices of the Latter Day Saints are still carried out. Here Mormons can take a new wife every month, if so minded, and nobody molests them. The settlements are very seldom visited, except by Mormons. The nearest railroad point is 200 miles distant, and no stage line traverses the 100 miles of territory over which the orthodox settlements are scattered. The only regular connection this community has with the outer world is an old Indian who brings the few letters that are written and takes them out. It is without exception the most heaven-forsaken country the eye of man ever rested upon. In some sections the alkali element prevails to such an extent as to clean the ground of the scantiest vegetation. Wide, smooth plains stretch out before the eye, white in the distance like snowbanks. In other places the alkali is so strong that the earth when wet rises like bread under yeast.

St. George is the mecca of this district, where the seal of the Mormon church is kept. Here, too, is a temple. Elders preside, who keep strangers at a distance and compel hard-working wives to uncomplainingly accept their wretched fate. These elders usurp the functions of law and order, and their word is final. Church matters govern everything. Stock raising and alfalfa farming are the industries pursued.

It is in the temple of this law-defying community that real Mormonism is still rampant. When a woman convert is accepted she is taken to the temple, washed in a tub repeatedly, arrayed in white linen and a veil of muslin, and given a new name, which she must never breathe except to her husband, in the endowment house. She goes through ceremonies like degrees in a lodge. A pantomime of fire and the devil is enacted, and a startling and impressive oath never to reveal the secrets of the order is administered.

At Salt Lake City, the old center of Mormonism, the wives have not been abandoned, but they have been scattered. Formerly a number of low dwelling houses, grouped together, would hold the different wives of some Mormon bishop, each in separate apartments. At every addition in matrimony a new house was built. When the Government began earnest war on polygamy these structures were abandoned. But the wives were not. They were distributed here and there about the city. Each husband has his favorite wife, but secretly provides for the maintenance of all the others as well.

It is authoritatively proven that the big Mormon colonies in Mexico and Canada are being used to foster polygamy. At Salt Lake City the Mecca of Mormonism, one can learn of dozens of instances where leading Mormons during the past year have gone on journeys to these points, accompanied by young women, and have returned to live apparently in the relation of husband and wife. New cases of this kind are being constantly solemnized under the secret forms of the Mormon church in one of the four temples in Utah where "sealing" is done. The recent death of President Abraham Cannon revealed the fact that he had taken a fourth wife even after Statehood was accomplished. Persons less notable have also been accused of violation of the law. In most instances, however, no complaints have been made, no demands for explanation, and no ecclesiastical trials. The men continue to hold their high positions in the church, and to preach. Every effort is made to shield the bigamists from the searching eyes of Gentiles outside of the fold.

The Mormon officials unite in strenuously denying that there are any polygamous new marriages, but they pay no attention to the secret ways of continuing the practice.

The most ardent supporters of polygamy seem to be the Mormon women—wives of leaders, whose voices in council receive considerable weight. No woman of the days of Brigham Young could have preached a more emphatic sermon in favor of polygamy than that of Congressman Roberts' third wife during a recent address before a meeting of the Young Women's Improvement Association. She told her audience that she was grieved to see so many young women of marriageable age living single lives, and declared that the laws of the land would not prevent her from taking the man she loved, and they should feel likewise. She said that for each of them there was an affinity, and if the affinity had sixteen wives she said it should make no difference when he was found.

Except in the isolated Southern Utah settlements, cases generally of new polygamy involve women of the highest character. They enter into such relations under the belief that they are obeying their religion. Young women in the Mormon church know that only a marriage in one of the temples is recognized as being divinely binding, as promised by their leaders. Marriage is comparatively easy, too, in Utah in a general way, although it is now compulsory to obtain a license from the county clerk. Ten years ago no license was required, and church officials alone performed marriage ceremonies and granted divorces. The authority to perform marriages is not confined to the high priesthood now. At least one-half of the male adult members of the Mormon church have authority to perform the ceremony.

With two sharp, clear aspects of the Mormon question the law and the public have to deal to-day—the strict observance of the law in Utah, the prevention of missionary work among the other States. This latter affair is one that is attracting general comment. All through the West Mormons are establishing missions, recruiting converts. They make religion the prominent feature of their doctrine, and, being "something new," many are attracted, and join. No matter how earnest and sincere many of these missionaries may appear plural marriages will always be condemned by true advocates of law and order.

MAP SHOWING SPREAD OF MORMONISM.

A Helpful Sermon.

The clergyman who narrates the following incident in the Interior confesses that, despite his years and his experience with all sorts and conditions of the feminine mind, it took his breath away.

He was preaching about the Father's tender wisdom in caring for us all. He illustrated by saying that the Father knows which of us grows best in sunlight, and which of us must have shade.

"You know you plant roses in the sunshine," he said, "and heliotrope and geraniums, but if you want your fuchsias to grow they must be kept in a shady nook."

After the sermon, which the clergyman hoped would be a comforting one, a woman came up to him, her face shining with pleasure that was evidently deep and true.

"O, Doctor ——, I am so grateful for that sermon," she said, clasping the clergyman's hand and shaking it warmly.

His pleasure was stirred for a moment, while he wondered what tender place in her heart and life he had touched. Only for a moment, though.

"Yes," she went on, fervently. "I never knew before what was the matter with my fuchsias."

Papa in Clover.

Wife—How in the world can you afford to buy those expensive cigars?

Husband—I don't buy them.

"Dear me! You don't mean to say any friend of yours is rich enough to give you such cigars, do you?"

"Well, no, not exactly. That young man who has got so smitten with our daughter——"

"Huh! No more than she is with him."

"Well, he's an agent or something for a big firm of cigar importers, and generally has his pockets full of their best samples. Well, after we go to bed, and the lights are turned down, he takes them out of his pockets and puts 'em on the mantelpiece—to keep 'em from getting crushed, I suppose. Then when it comes to leaving, between the desire to skip out without making any noise at such a late hour, and the pain of saying good-night to our daughter, he forgets all about them. I tell you, Mariah, our daughter has been a pretty heavy expense, but she's sort o' payin' for herself now."

New South Wales lost $1,000,000 by the drought of 1897-98. Yet the colony thrives.

FORECASTS OF TWELFTH CENSUS.

It is not possible to foretell what the twelfth census will disclose. The actual results always confound the prophet. He often finds that he has underestimated. There is no fixed law of growth.

In estimating the population as of June, 1900, when the census will be taken, we have figures brought almost up to date. From the governors or other high official sources in each of the States and Territories the New York World secured at the close of 1898 an estimate of the population of each upon Jan. 1, 1899. As only a year and a half will elapse before the taking of the census it is not unreasonable to assume that the rate of growth shown since 1890 will continue during this brief remaining period.

On Jan. 1 last our population, according to these estimates, was 77,983,363. This includes Alaska and Indian Territory, but not Hawaii, Porto Rico or the Philippines. Making the proportionate increase, we get 80,256,082 as the grand total for the United States proper in June, 1900.

The population of Hawaii is estimated at 110,000, based on a census in 1897; that of Porto Rico at 900,000, and that of the Philippines at 8,000,000, both of thelatter estimates being largely guesswork. Add these and we have the "imperial" total of 89,266,082.

In a decade Uncle Sam will have grown from 62,831,900 (census of 1890) to 89,266,082—about 40 per cent. Disregarding the "colonies," he will have grown 17,424,182—nearly 30 per cent. In a century he will have grown from 5,308,483 (census of 1800) to 80,256,082—that is, he will be more than fifteen times as large.

In 1800, according to Mulhall, the great English statistician, the wealth of the United States was $1,080,000,000; in 1850 it was $7,136,000,000; in 1860, $16,160,000,000; in 1870, 25,982,000,000; and in 1880, $43,642,000,000. In 1900, according to Special Agent J. K. Upton, of the census bureau, our wealth—which includes real estate and improvements, live stock and farm accessories, mines and quarries, coin and bullion, machinery, raw and manufactured products, railroads, telegraphs, telephones, shipping, canals, etc.—amounted to $65,037,091,197. This was more than $1,000 apiece for each man, woman and child in the country.

There is no reason to suppose that our wealth has increased any less rapidly during the present decade. Assuming that the rate will prove to have been at least the same, Uncle Sam's wealth in June, 1900, will probably be about $97,000,000,000. Mulhall estimates that the wealth of the world in 1888 was less than $300,000,000,000. Our greatest rival in wealth is Great Britain. Mulhall estimates that in 1888 Great Britain was worth about $46,000,000.

Of railroads we had in 1800, of course, none. In 1890 there were in operation 163,420 miles of railroad, according to Poor's Manual. In 1897 there were 182,919 miles. Assuming the same rate of increase, there will be in 1900 191,274 miles. This increase is by no means in proportion to the growth in wealth, but is substantial and healthy.

New York	5,997,853	7,150,000

The accompanying diagram tells the story more graphically. What States have grown more rapidly than others can be seen at a glance.

A NICKEL'S WORTH OF WIND.

Contrivance by Which One May Have Cool Breezes in Summer.

Among the summer novelties patented is an electric fan, worked on the principle of the nickel-in-the-slot machine. It is proposed to build a large number of these and place them in offices and homes, where the current has been already installed. They are put in operation by the insertion of the necessary coin, and a refreshing current of air may be had at will until a certain predetermined amount of current has been used, when it is necessary to insert another coin. The inventor of this says that many persons are deterred from investing in these fans because of their initial expense of purchase, and the limited service secured, there being but about two months in the whole year when the fans are desired. He thinks the fans would be more generally resorted to if a delightful breeze could be created merely by the expenditure of a small amount of money.

SAVED HIS MASTER'S LIFE.

Terrible Experience of a Man Caught in a Wolf Trap.

In "Wild Animals I Have Known," Ernest Seton Thompson relates a terrible experience. He had gone out alone to a remote district on his pony to inspect some wolf-traps. In one of them he found a wolf, and having killed it was engaged in resetting the trap, when inadvertently he sprung the next one, and his hand was caught in the massive steel jaws.

I lay on my face, he says, and stretched out my toe, hoping to draw within reach the trap wrench, which I had thrown down a few feet away. Wolf-traps are set in fours around a buried bait, and are covered with cotton and fine sand so as to be quite invisible.

Intent on securing the wrench, I swung about my anchor, stretching and reaching to the utmost, unable to see just where it lay, but trusting to the sense of touch to find it. A moment later there was a sharp "clank," and the iron jaws of trap No. 3 closed on my left foot!

Struggle as I would, I could not move either trap, and there I lay stretched out and securely staked to the ground. No one knew where I had gone, and there was slight prospect of any one's coming to the place for weeks. The full horror of my situation was upon me—to be devoured by wolves, or die of cold and starvation. My pony, meantime, stood patiently waiting to take me home.

The afternoon waned, and night came on, a night of horror! Wolves howled in the distance, and then drew nearer and nearer. They seized upon and devoured the carcass of the one I had slaughtered, and one of them, growing bolder, came up and snarled in my face. Then there was a sudden rush, and a fight among the wolves.

I could not see well, and for an instant I thought my time had come when a big fellow dashed upon me! But it was Bingo—my noble dog—who rubbed his shaggy, panting sides against me and licked my face. He had scattered the wolves, and killed one, as I afterward learned.

"Bingo! Bingo, old boy! Fetch me the trap wrench!"

Away he went, and came dragging my rifle, for he knew only that I wanted something.

"No, Bing—the trap wrench!"

This time it was my sash, but at last he brought the wrench, and wagged his tail in joy that it was right. With difficulty, reaching out with my free hand, I unscrewed the pillar nut. The trap fell apart and my hand was released, and a minute later I was free.

Bingo brought up my pony, which had fled at the approach of the wolves, and soon we were on the way home, with the dog as herald, leaping and barking for joy.

were killed, was a captain in the regular service. He graduated from West Point in 1881 and some years later was granted leave of absence from service to act as military instructor in the Nebraska State University. He was in the service there when the Spanish war broke out and was made a major in the First Nebraska. His ideas of discipline made him unpopular, but after the regiment reached Manila and his coolness and bravery became known he was the idol of the men.

RAN ON THE ROCKET.

Edward Entwhistle, the First Passenger Engineer, Is 84 Years of Age.

Edward Entwhistle, who has recently celebrated his 84th birthday at the home of Mrs. Thomas O'Dea, his granddaughter, in East Des Moines, Iowa, has seen the great railroad systems of the world develop from their very beginning. He was the first railroad passenger engineer. Despite his age he is hale and hearty and looks confidently forward to several years of life.

ENTWHISTLE AND THE ROCKET.

Mr. Entwhistle as a boy of 14 held the throttle on the first trip of the Rocket, Stevenson's pioneer engine.

Edward Entwhistle was born March 24, 1815, at Tilsey's Banks, Lancashire, England, and while a mere boy was apprenticed to learn the machinist's, or, as it is known in England, the engineers' trade. The Rocket was built in the shops in which he was employed and the interest which he took in the machine attracted the attention of Stevenson, who recommended that he be permitted to ride on the engine on its first trip over the Liverpool and Manchester line, for which it was constructed. Young Entwhistle made the trip and on the return journey he held the throttle. This was the beginning of his career as a locomotive engineer. He ran the Rocket for two years, making two round trips between Liverpool and Manchester, a distance of thirty-one miles each way. The work wore on him and he was obliged, because of nervousness, to resign. Stevenson then secured for him a place as second engineer on one of the duke of Bridgewater's coasting steamers. He came to America in 1837 and became engineer on the Troy, a Hudson river steamer. Soon after the engineer of the famous John Bull locomotive was injured and Entwhistle took his run. In 1844 he came to Chicago and at different times held positions as stationary engineer, lake steamer engineer and locomotive engineer. He came to Des Moines in 1856 and became engineer of Shepherd & Perrier's flouring mill. Later he became engineer of the Ankeny mills, a position he held for twenty-two years.

When Mr. Entwhistle visited the World's Fair in Chicago he spent nearly all his time for three days standing beside the Rocket, which was on exhibition. He is a remarkably modest man and did not make his identity or his early connection with the engine known. He even pledged the members of his family not to "give him away," but he derived great pleasure from gazing at the pioneer locomotive and comparing it with the modern machines which were on exhibition in the same building. The picture which accompanies this sketch is from a photograph taken about the time of Mr. Entwhistle's visit to the World's Fair.

A RED HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Chief Half-Moon Bore a Striking Resemblance to the Noted Preacher.

Chief Half-Moon of the Sin-Ka-Use or Columbia Indians, is dead. Half-Moon, better known as Moses to the white people in the State of Washington, had three claims on fame. One, and to him the most important, was that he bore close resemblance to Henry Ward Beecher, the facial likeness being startlingly similiar. Another was that he was a first cousin to the redoubtable Chief Joseph of Nez Perce reputation, and masqueraded a great deal in the guise of a good Indian. Half-Moon's third claim to fame rested on the assertion of his kinsmen that he was between 100 and 200 years old. This latter claim, however, seems to be merely a bit of Indian hyperbole. Pioneer residents of Washington put Half-Moon's age at 75 years.

Half-Moon came of bad parentage. His father was a bloodthirsty, murderous savage, and Half-Moon inherited all of his worst traits. Previous to the subjugation of his tribe he was continually at war with the whites, and participated in many murders and brutal massacres.

Personally, Moses was a commanding figure, standing nearly six feet in hight, and weighing about 250 pounds. He was by far the biggest Indian in the bunch and strong as an ox. His strength had, however, become merely a tradition, for, since he became the petted ward of the government, with its $1,000 annuity, he had no ambition or excuse to do aught but live in idleness and splendor, preferring only to take up the white man's burden in the shape of bearing a load of Kentucky rye under his belt. These occasions, however, were only periodical with the aged chief in his later years, as he had long been a sufferer from Bright's disease, which finally carried him off.

KINGDOM OF BEGGARS.

Unique Mendicant Monarchy Once Established in France.

In France a veritable beggar, kingdom sprang into existence. It was an elective monarchy, and its rogue of a king swelled his exchequer by levying taxes on his disreputable subjects. His able lieutenants, known as cagoux, collected revenues in distant parts of the domain, and enforced the penalties for non-payment of tribute, adding to these duties the task of instructing youthful mendicants on all the subtleties of their art. Directly beneath the cagoux in rank was another class of officials, composed of decayed priests and students, whose smattering of learning gave them some standing even among beggars. These were the archisuppots, the mendicants' counselors-at-law, who taught recruits the beggar tongue, Argot.

The rank and file of the beggars were divided into distinct classes, each following some particular form of mendicity, to which strict attention was demanded. One had to be a specialist, and stick to his own line of business; the general practitioner was accorded no recognition.

The subjects of the King of Argot kept no chronicles; consequently our knowledge of the beggar dynasty is somewhat limited. Three kings, however, managed to make names for themselves in history—Ragot, a Solon in rags, who founded the monarchy and drew up a system of laws for its government; Anacreon, who, wrapped in a mantle of a thousand pieces, collected alms while riding an ass through the streets of Paris, and a monarch who is known to us as the King of Tunis. The latter reigned for three years only, and was broken on the wheel at Bordeaux because his ideas of personal liberty differed from those of the French Government, whose millions happened to be stronger than his own.

At stated periods the French beggars held a general parliament at Sainte Anne d'Auray, in Brittany, where means were discussed for the advancement of mendicity in all its branches. What a gathering it must have been. What a fantastic, nightmare-like assemblage of rags and tatters!—Lippincott's.

Important to Farmers.

There is a proposition made in the advertising columns of this paper by the John M Smythe Co. of Chicago, to furnish Standard and Sisal Binder Twine direct to farmers at eight cents a pound. This means a saving of thousands of dollars to the farmers of the West who use a great deal of binder twine during the harvesting season. As there is a time limit to the offer, farmers should send in their orders before June 1, when the limit expires and after which it is not certain orders can be filled at this price. This proposition of the John M. Smythe Company for money saving is well worth considering. The firm is certainly one of the most extensive as well as most reliable in the United States.

Of Ancient Chinese Origin.

Tying knots in a handkerchief to jog one's memory had its origin in China thousands of years ago. Before writing was invented in that country, which did not happen until 300 B. C., memorable and important events were recorded by long-knotted cords. The most ancient history of China is still preserved as told by these knots. When Emperor Tschang Ki invented writing the entire system of "knotting" was abandoned. And to-day the memory knots made by us in handkerchiefs are the only surviving descendants of that ancient custom.

A polite Chinaman considers it a breach of etiquette to wear spectacles in company.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Gas Explosion Startles a Town—End of a Haunted House in Peru—Shot on His Own Doorstep—One Wreck Quickly Follows Another.

A break in the main line of the Chicago Gas Pipe Line Company near Logansport caused an explosion which shook the city and startled the citizens from their homes. A flaw in an eight-inch main caused the explosion and threw dirt and rock high in the air. The gas continued to escape with a roar and rush that could be heard for miles around. The break was repaired after several hours' hard work.

Tears Down a Haunted House.

Charles H. Brownell, one of Peru's wealthiest citizens, is tearing down a brick residence in the eastern part of the town because the belief prevails that the dwelling is haunted. He has vainly endeavored for several years to rent the property, but in every instance has gone up against the superstition, until in disgust he is tearing the building down and will use the brick in another structure.

Second Wreck in Two Days.

A wreck on the Bedford branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern branch was followed by a collision about six miles east of the main line, the wrecking crew which was at work on the branch being called there before getting its first wreck cleared. No lives were lost, the engineer and fireman jumping to save their lives.

Called to His Door and Shot.

John Boohr of Kokomo was fatally shot at his door the other night by George Chamberlin. The men had quarreled regarding Boohr's wife, and Chamberlin, while intoxicated, went to the Boohr home and without saying a word fired a bullet into Boohr's left breast, near the heart. He was arrested.

The body of a man was found by two little girls in a clump of bushes near the railroad two miles west of New Carlisle. The terrified girls made their discovery known to the section men. The body was in a decomposed condition, part of the flesh having dropped off the face and is supposed to have been lying there a week. The corpse was stretched on a board, the hands folded over the breast and it is thought by many that it was placed there by other hands, while some think poison is the cause of death. Nothing has been found to identify the dead man.

Papered Ceilings Out of Style.

Householders and others who are arranging for spring renovating will soon notice that all the better class of wall papers are now being made without ceilings, and that ceilings are being tinted. Any person who now buys paper and papers his house, if he wishes to be up with the times, should at least tint the ceilings. In such tinting there is only one durable material that he can secure, and that is Alabastine, the unequaled wall coating. What are known as kalsomines are especially bad for ceilings, as the stuff scales and falls off. In fact, the word "kalsomine" has become so unpopular, on account of the goods being only temporary, that the later manufacturers of kalsomines are giving their material some arbitrary name and not calling it a kalsomine.

Every one of the strong points in regard to Alabastine that has been proved to be such by the test of twenty years, is picked up by every new manufacturer of ordinary kalsomine and claimed for his goods. These claims, on the face of them, are ridiculous, but it will take a householder who uses these goods perhaps two or three years to find out that he has gotten nothing but a temporary kalsomine; and by that time the particular manufacturer may be out of the market.

Alabastine is a rock-base cement, which sets, and hardens with age. It is the only material that can make the claim of durability and substantiate it by actual time tests. This phenomenal wall coating is adapted to all grades, from the most elaborate free-hand modeling with a machine to the cheapest plain tinting and whitening, and requires only cold water to mix it for use. It never needs taking off to renew, hustles out house pests, sweetens apartments, and fills cracks.

Paint dealers furnish card of twelve beautiful tints. A free copy of "Alabastine Era" may be had by addressing Alabastine Company, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Balloons for the Dead.

In his capacity of high priest the emperor has to offer at least forty-six sacrifices to different gods in the course of a year, and as to each sacrifice is dedicated one or more holidays, which must be passed by him in complete solitude, the miserable monarch's time must be pretty well taken up. It is also a very strict religious rule that his majesty shall offer in the course of every year many hundreds of silk balloons before the tablets of his ancestors, the unbroken line of whom extends back before the lifetime of Jesus Christ. These balloons are made of the richest silk obtainable, and several of the imperial silk manufactories are occupied the whole year through with the fabrication of the material.—Pinang Gazette.

Farmers and Binders' Twine.

The offer made elsewhere in this paper by the John M. Smyth Company, of Chicago, to furnish farmers with Binder Twine is certainly something unprecedented in these days. The prices are named on the different grades of Twine and the privilege of examination and comparison with other qualities and values offered each purchaser. The firm making these offers is one of the most reliable and extensive in the United States.

WHIMS OF "POLLY" THAXTER.

A Lively Bird that Belonged to the Late New England Poetess.

A few years ago, when Miss Celia Thaxter lived on an island off the coast of New England, among her flowers and birds was a gray parrot that she had inherited from her mother. Polly, however much she was endeared to the poet through long association with her family, was roundly hated by the islanders.

One of the ways by which Polly made herself disagreeable was through her powers of mimicry. To her mistress she was invariably sweetness and courtesy, and she would cry "Celia, Celia," as if she were calling the name of her most idolized friend, in the most musical and endearing tones possible, and from that turn to imitating the bashful, whispering utterances of a shy little Norwegian maid until the girl would be teased beyond endurance.

In approaching Polly's cage it was no unusual thing for a visitor to be captivated with her coy and artless manner and the very caressing way she had of putting out a claw in friendly welcome, and then, when the unwary mortal was within her reach, she would drive that enticing claw into his flesh like a thing of iron. There was never any trusting her, for she was sure in the end to be treachery itself.

Among the whims that seized Polly—and she seemed forever to be intent upon mischief—was to annoy the new driver of an express wagon by shouting "Whoa" to the horses in the exact voice of the former driver, which would bring the animal from a smart trot to a sudden halt.

One day Polly escaped from her perch and was lost sight of for several days. The ground was white with an early snow, and the poet's brother, who was found of hunting, went out with his gun. While wandering about in search of game he saw in a tree what he concluded was an owl or gull, and, lifting his gun, took aim to shoot. Suddenly he was arrested by the sharp cry of "Cedric, Cedric!" The bird had called him by name, and was none other than Polly herself, who for once, at least, by a word in due season, had saved her own life. Of course, Cedric got Polly down and took her home, where she proclaimed her return by sending over the island one of her famous shrieks.

After the death of the poet, Polly again disappeared, and was never more seen. Just what her fate was has not yet been discovered, but it is supposed that she was poisoned, or in some way secretly killed.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Nervous People.

Nervous people not only suffer themselves but cause more or less misery to everyone around them. They are fretful, easily worried and therefore a worry to others.

When everything annoys you; when your pulse beats excessively; when you are startled at the least unexpected sound, your nerves are in a bad state and should be promptly attended to.

Nervousness is a question of nutrition. Food for the nerves is what you need to put you right, and the best nerve food in the world is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

They give strength and tone to every nerve in the body, and make despondent, easily irritated people feel that life has renewed its charms. Here is proof:

Miss Cora Watrous, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Mr. I. C. Watrous, of 61 Clarion St., Bradford, Pa., was seized with a nervous disorder which threatened to end her life. Eminent physicians agreed the trouble was from impoverished blood, but failed to give relief. Mr. Watrous heard Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People were highly recommended for nervous disorders, and gave them a trial. Before the first box had been taken the girl's condition improved. After using six boxes her appetite returned, the pain in her head ceased, and she was stronger than ever before. "My daughter's life was saved by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," said Mrs. Watrous. "Her condition was almost hopeless when she commenced taking them, but now she is strong and healthy. I cannot recommend these pills too highly."—Bradford (Pa.) Era.

The Deering way is the common sense way.

DEERING HARVESTER CO., - - CHICAGO.

WOMEN are assailed at every turn by troubles peculiar to their sex. Every mysterious ache or pain is a symptom. These distressing sensations will keep on coming unless properly treated.

The history of neglect is written in the worn faces and wasted figures of nine-tenths of our women, every one of whom may receive the invaluable advice of Mrs. Pinkham, without charge, by writing to her at Lynn, Mass.

WOMEN WHO NEED MRS. PINKHAM'S AID

MISS LULA EVANS, of Parkersburg, Iowa, writes of her recovery as follows:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I had been a constant sufferer for nearly three years. Had inflammation of the womb, leucorrhœa, heart trouble, bearing-down pains, backache, headache, ached all over, and at times could hardly stand on my feet. My heart trouble was so bad that some nights I was compelled to sit up in bed or get up and walk the floor, for it seemed as though I should smother. More than once I have been obliged to have the doctor visit me in the middle of the night. I was also very nervous and fretful. I was utterly discouraged. One day I thought I would write and see if you could do anything for me. I followed your advice and now I feel like a new woman. All those dreadful troubles I have no more, and I have found Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash a sure cure for leucorrhœa. I am very thankful for your good advice and medicine."

Thursday's Daily.

—A young lady at Evansville, Miss Rosa Storker, died this week from peritonitis caused by taking part in too many cake walks.

—The Warren, Ind., Republican says it is all right now between us and Spain They have our twenty millions and we have their philopenas.

—August Balke and Fred Funk are likely to have a suit in justice court over a 14 foot ladder, Each claims to own it, but August will sue for it.

—The Turner voting machine will be used by the Indianapolis Typographical Union at their coming election of officers. Printers are progressive.

—Miss Blanche Kelley and Miss Yeagey of Waterloo, were over to the show last evening, with their escorts, whose names we did not learn. They appeared to enjoy the fine acting.

—One of the Garrett teams upset just west of the Lake Shore, while going home after the show last evening. It was raining hard and they got wet and muddy. But they didn't want the Auburn papers to know it.

—The ice cream social of the Catholic church could not be held on the lawn last evening, on account of the rain, but the sheriff's residence was kindly placed at their disposal, and they had a fair patronage, but not what they would have had if the weather had been pleasant. Those who did come were made welcome, and found the ice cream and cake very fine.

—Waterloo sent down a delegation of its leading M E. ladies today, who are selling copies of their special paper, the "Elite." They do this to help raise money for their church. We hope they may have a liberal patronage for their cause is worthy. Their names are familiar to most of our people. They are Mrs. F. N. Beidler, Mrs. S. R. Rickel. Mrs. Cora Stanley, Mrs. Archie Sinclair and Miss Anna Deventer.

—Prof. John Clark Ridpath's famous dog Duke is dead. He was an animal of remarkable sagacity. Among other stories they tell of him, is that one day, when carrying meat home, another dog pounced on him. Duke could not fight with the basket handle in his mouth, and if he put it down some other dog might get it. So he jumped up on a stone wall and left the basket safe, then got down and whipped his assailant. Then he got the basket and took it home.

—Angola Herald: At the annual reunion of Co. H., 157th Indiana, held at the court house last Wednesday evening, 48 members answered to roll call. And, besides, there was a good attendance of citizens, comfortably filling the court room and gallery. Interesting addresses were made by members of the Company and others presents, including Judge Hartman and Elder Joseph Porter of the G. A. R. Sergeant Long formally presented the colors of the company to the W. R C., for safe keeping, and the charge was accepted with thanks by Mrs. James Dutter, on behalf of the ladies.

—Butler Record:—Editor Coleman late of the Butler Herald, who we stated last week had gotten control of the Peru Daily and Weekly News, has left that town between two suns and gone nobody knows where. He worked the same kind of a scheme there he did here, collecting all the money he could and paying as little He left a number of bills unpaid there including his hotel bill. He worked the secret order racket there too. He ought to be arrested and in penitintiary. He buys newspaper plants by issuing drafts on someone in Illinois. By the time the draft gets back unhonored he has had control of the paper a week or two and filled his pockets.

A preacher not far away, says an exchange is said to have used the following ceremony with telling effect: "Wilt thou take her for thy pard, for better or for worse, to have, to hold. to fondly guard till hauled off in a hearse? Wilt thou let her have her way, consult her many wishes, make the fire every morning and help her wash the dishes? Wilt thou give her all the 'stuff' her little purse will pack, buy a boa and a muff and a little sealskin sacque? Wilt thou comfort and support her father and her mother, Aunt Jemima, Uncle John, three sisters and a brother?" And his face grew pale and blank—it was too late to jilt: as through the chapel floor he sank and faintly said, "I wilt."

is robbed of its terrors by the fact that the best medical authorities state that it is a curable disease; and one of the happy things about it is, that its victims rarely ever lose hope.

You know there are all sorts of secret nostrums advertised to cure consumption. Some make absurd claims. We only say that if taken in time and the laws of health are properly observed, will heal the inflammation of the throat and lungs and nourish and strengthen the body so that it can throw off the disease.

We have thousands of testimonials where people claim they have been permanently cured of this malady.

—D. S. Ober is down town now every day, being greatly improved, with a good prospect of recovering his health.

—Ferd Palmer of Garrett was here today on his way to Fort Wayne. He says the company is now employing a full force of men at Garrett.

—The grass on the public square seems to grow this year in spite of the shade. And all things seem to grow well since the cold spring weather let up.

—Geo. H. Reed of Corunna was one of those pardoned from the Michigan City penitentiary last week. Our people will remember his case very well.

—The biggest single sale of shingles A. Lewis ever made, was Wednesday, when he sold Isaac Dillmar 50 thousand of those fine Davenport yellow cedar shingles.

—C E. Baxter came back from Lagrange this morning. He says wheat looks far better up there than it does in DeKalb. We hope so, for it is pretty bad around here.

—Angola Herald has a beautiful fuchsia with over 200 blooms in the south window of the drugstore. It was grown from a slip cut last August and is a virgorous and prolific plant.

Newfoundland people want to be annexed to the United States. They never got along well with the other provnces of Canada. They are also much more conveniently situated for union with us.

—D. J. Wile a former Laporte attorney, but later located in Chicago, was shot last week by a girl who had become infatuated with him, and found he was married. She shot herself also, dying at once. He may live.

—Goshen Times:—Hereafter it is optional with the judge of a circuit court whether or not applications for changes of venue are granted. The judge is thus made responsible for the expense incurred where changes are granted.

—Lee Kelsel at Columbia City was driving out with his wife Wednesday evening, when the horse became unmanageable, and finally broke away from the buggy He was jerked out and kicked so, he died in a few minutes.

—An old veteran fainted while having his hair cut, in a Laporte barbar shop last week. It was then discovered that the man had a silver plate to replace a piece of skull, that a shell had torn out in battle. It was so tender a spot, that when the shears accidentally hit it, it caused him to faint.

—Columbia City Post:—All of the Indiana canneries have sold out of all their last year's crop of tomatoes and the entire out-put of the canneries for 1899 has already been contracted for. The nearest canneries to the place are at Warsaw and North Manchester. It might pay to raise tomatoes and ship to these points.

—The largest girl of her age in Indiana lives six miles from North Manchester. Her name is Elizabeth Clarinda Pridemore, and she is the daughter of a farmer, William Pridemore. The young woman is barely 13 years old and weighs nearly 300 pounds The other members of the Pridemore family are without exception very slender.

—Attorney C. E. Baxter went up to Lagrange yesterday where he had a case in court. He greatly admires the convenience of getting to and from that county seat when one has to depend on three different railroads or on two railroads and a livery team. He took the latter plan, coming over from Waterloo in the night.

—Father Dandurand has received an invitation to attend and participate in an entertainment to be given by the students of Notre Dame, on May 15, in honor of Right Rev, Monsignor Martinelli, the Papal delegate for the United States. He pays the institution a visit at that time, and is accompanied by his secretary, Rev. Father Rooker.

—Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Brown celebrated their 17th wedding anniversary yesterday by giving a 5 o'clock tea to a number of their friends. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Guild, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Zimmerman and Mr. and Mrs. Archie McIntyre. There was an elegant luncheon and a most pleasant time is reported by all.

—The postmaster at Jamestown, Ohio, went out with some little boys the other night, to play a practical joke on a friend of his by fixing a "tic knock" to the window and making him jump. The friend did jump, got his gun and shot the postmaster dead in his tracks. McKinley should be more careful of the kind of men he selects for office. Still there is a bright side to these things. He can now reward one more of the numerous aspirants.

—Our people who have passed through Wellsboro on the B. & O., have noticed a row one-story brick rooms just southwest of the station. They are now being torn down and cleaned up. An old bachelor built them two or three years ago, and put in more money than he had, got in debt, and some of the people think he fired them to get insurance, There were 11 rooms, only a few having ever been used.

—Col. Vick Backus, late of the 161st Indiana is here, looking up the matter of sewer contract. He has had an abundant experience in work of this kind, though for a year past he has been in the service. Like a good soldier, when the fighting is all done. he lays aside his sword and goes to work again He and his regiment witnessed the surrender of Havana, the Indiana flag being the leading one in the march into the city. He comes back with the sunburn of the tropics on his bronzed face and we really hope he may get in the lucky bid.

—Judge Hartman came home last evening having closed court at Angola, after a very busy session. Much important business was done, aside from the ordinary routine work. He also appointed the 36 members of the township advisory boards, for their twelve townships, putting on two republicans and one democrat in each. This is the usual plan. A democratic judge is also expected to divide the honors by putting on two democrats and one republican in each township. On the county Board, the judges are putting the four district members on from their own party and the three at large faom the opposite party.

of grain can be threshed in a day (and threshed perfectly and separated thoroughly, without waste) if you have a Nichols-Shepard Separator. And the straw will be handled easily, without the slightest trouble and almost no litter, if you use the Nichols-Shepard Swinging Stacker. This takes the place and does the work of an independent stacker. It oscillates automatically, is easily swung to right angles with the separator to carry the straw to either stack or barn. This stacker has been demonstrated by thorough and practical tests in the field to be the handiest, most efficient swinging stacker ever attached to a thresher. Like every other feature of the

COL. FRED FUNSTON

His Adventures in Alaska, Central America, Cuba and the Philippines.

Though he is now a brigadier General, it is certain he will be remembered best as colonel of the Twentieth Kansas Volunteers, the smallest officer in the service, five feet four inches tall and weighing 95 pounds. He was born at New Carlisle, Ohio, but when he was still a boy his people went to Kansas and settled on a farm. Later on he traveled some, and spent a year or so in Mexico. Returning he entered Kansas State University, then was employed with the Santa Fe Road, then was for a time a reporter on a Kansas City paper. Later he went with a government party as botanical explorer in Dakota and Montana. He was a member of the U. S. expedition, that suffered so terribly in crossing Death Valley in Southern California in 1891, and is said to be the only one of the party now living. In 1892 and 1893 he was sent by the government to Alaska, to study the botany of the country along the coast. That trip he had wild journey aside from his regular work, when he went 900 miles and back to see the North American whaling squadron then frozen in. In '94 he spent six months trying to establish a coffee plantation in Central America. Then he put in a year as assistant auditor of the Santa Fe road. In 1895 he went to Cuba to help the insurgents. He was made a lieutenant and rose to be lieutenant-colonel and chief of artillery under Garcia. He was in many fights, and it was he who first used the dynamite guns that American sympathizers sent over to the Cubans. They were the first guns of that sort ever used in actual war. He had never seen one of the guns before, and fired it by the printed directions the maker had sent along. In December 1897, he came home, wounded and sick. The next spring when Kansas raised a regiment for the Spanish war. Gov. Leedy made him its colonel. He was at Tampa some weeks to give Gen. Miles information about Cuba. When his regiment went to San Francisco, they made the long trip in plain farmer clothes as, Uncle Sam did not give them uniforms till a month or so later. Newspaper correspondents made a good of fun of them, more than they will again probably. When the boys got their uniforms and Funston had given them drill, they became a crack regiment. There was not a man in the regiment who could not read. Two thirds of its officers were college graduates. Of its colonel, we have already spoken. Its lieutenant-colonel, who has now become colonel, had been U. S. consul-general at Cario, Egypt, and was considered an able diplomat. The 20th Kansas has happened to get into about every fight in the Philippines and under the lead of Col. Funston has become famous. In half a dozen instances, Col. Funston led them in desperate charges. Sometimes swimming rivers, once crossing on a raft, once over a burning bridge, and always doing this under fire. Now. the regiment has only about a third of its men fit for duty and it will be sent home. The twin cities of Kansas City, Kansas, and Kansas City, Mo., are going to give them a rousing welcome.

Fine Fat Cattle.

George Hoodelmyer brought to town today three fat steers he had sold to George Reeves, of Garrett, the cattle buyer. They were nice, clean and fat, and were beauties, Two were Holsteins and the other a mixed one. Their combined weight was 3440 pounds, which at the price paid 4¼ cents a pound, amounted to $154.80. This would be an average of $51.50 each, which would seem a better paying thing than raising wheat.

WILLING TO HELP

Securing freedom from the grip of catarrh makes loyal friends for the liberator.

Pe-ru-na has been making friends of this kind for many years. It cures catarrh wherever located.

Mrs. R. Eades, of 35 Twenty-eighth St., Detroit, Mich., is one of the many thousand of Pe-ru-na's friends. This is what she says to Dr. Hartman:

"We have used your Pe-ru-na with the most remarkable results and would not be without it. We have always recommended it to our friends. A few years ago I purchased a bottle of your Pe-ru-na and after seeing its results, recommended it to my grocer who was troubled with dyspepsia, the curing of which induced her to sell it in her store. She has sold large amounts of it. My daughter has just been cured of jaundice with Pe-ru-na. My pen would grow weary were I to begin to tell you of the numerous cures Pe-ru-na has effected in our immediate vicinity within the last couple of years."

Dr. Hartman, President of the Surgical Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, will counsel and prescribe for fifty thousand women this year free of charge. Every suffering woman should write for special question blank for women, and have Dr. Hartman's book, "Health and Beauty." All druggists sell Pe-ru-na.

A REMINISCENCE.

But Night Watch Henry Baker, will Never Forget it.

We were talking the other evening to Night Watch Henry Baker, and after speaking of his entering on this work March 10, 1888, over eleven years ago, we naturally drifted into some of his earlier experiences. In less than a month after he became night policeman, he had a thrilling experience, to which some of our people will remember. but of which some of our later citizens have not heard.

On Sunday evening, April 1, of that year, he went on his beat at the usual hour. But in the night he was walking east where the Gandy Block now is, to see that all was well. Wm. Shaffer, then had his harness shop in a small frame building sitting two or three feet from the brick building, and just as he came past the little building he found himself looking into the muzzles of three revolvers close to his face. The men had evidently been waiting between the two buildings and had run around north, then south to him. They had a clothes line, with which they quickly tied him, carried him to the rear and laid him on the grass. They took his revolver, then left a man with a cocked pistol with orders to shoot if he cried out, and then the rest of the gang went to the Ensley & Harter store now the Bradford Hotel building and blew open the safe. They fired three charges, and got all the money the firm had taken in after banking hours the evening before, supposed to be about $65. But their dynamite had awakened John Knoder who lived where he now does, and he and a man who was watching his house exchanged shots. Then the robbers fled, and Knoder helped Mr. Baker to get free. He was now badly chilled from lying helpless so long in the cold night air for about two hours. He hurried to the jail for the sheriff. He found the deputy and then went for the sheriff, Mr. Garrison who lived a few blocks away. The deputy, was evidently afraid, and would not move unless Mr. Baker went with him. They got the sheriff out and told him all the trouble and wanted him to start in pursuit at once. But he made the excuse, that he would not know them if he found them. Then he went back to bed. The burglars were never found.

Teacher Tied by Thugs

—LINCOLN, Neb., May 18.—Miss Lethe E. Watson, teacher of elocution in Cotner university, was found by students late last night, bound, gagged and unconcious in a room of the university building. Cotner is the seat of the Christian church denominational college, six miles from Lincoln.

According to the story of Miss Watson, she was alone in a classroom on the fourth floor of the building, and overheard two men plotting to burn the university. She surprised them, when they knocked her down, bound and gagged her and locked her in a room. She was not badly injured.

Letter From Manila

MANILA, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, March 30, 1899.

REV. J. D. BROSY.

MY DEAR AND ESTEEMED FRIEND:—As I have some spare time I will drop you a few lines. We arrived in Manila five weeks ago today and have been fighting most of the time. Times are very bad here at present. There is fighting in the city and all around it, and the slaughter is terrible. There has been about 6000 insurgents killed and about 150 Americans, but we look for a surrender before long. We are marching on the insurgents capital called Maloloe, and we expect that to end the fighting. Things are a great deal more difficult here than they were in Cuba. We have services every Sunday and during the week when conditions will allow. Also have a Young Men's Christian Association, and have a large membership considering. The natives have a religion the same as the Spaniards, but there are tribes who still worship idols in the mountains. There are parts of this island thirty miles from Manila that has never been explored, and is extremely wild. There are lots of Chinamen here, about one-third of the people are composed of them. Well Mr. Brosy I wish you were here and could take a look at the walled city, built in 1571. It extends 40 miles around the city, and most every other building is a Catholic church, and the priests are the ones that are causing the trouble among the natives. They are very ignorant and superstitious, and believe every thing they tell them. Well as I have given you a brief description of the affairs here, will give you a better one when I get time. Well Mr. Brosy give all my friends at church my best, and tell Claud Link I will write him when I can get time. I wrote my sister last week. I presume this letter will be rather old when you get it, as it takes about thirty-five days to get there. Will close, hoping to hear from you in the near future.

Ever your friend,

WM. CLARK.

Col. Gunder's Horse.

A dispatch from Marion, Ind., says, Col. George W. Gunder of the 160th Indiana, who recently returned from Cuba, was thrown from a buggy yesterday and seriously injured. The Colonel and Mrs. Gunder were driving and the Colonel was handling the reins over his war horse, which accompanied him to the southern camps and to Cuba. The horse became frightened at some object along the road and ran away. The buggy was demolished and Colonel Gunder and wife were thrown out. Colonel Gunder struck on his head and shoulder, and two ribs were broken. He was also badly bruised. Mrs. Gunder was only slightly hurt.

GEORGE HAZZARD AGAIN

Tacoma, Wash. May 18. George Hazzard a democratic politician known all over the west, was arrested on an indictment found by the United States grand jury at Butte, Mont., for violating the civil service law by collecting funds on the Indian reservations in the campaign of 1896. Mr. Hazzard was released on his own recoginzance by Judge Hanford for appearance in Montana in June.

ON THE WABASH FAR AWAY

The Author, Paul Dresser Sued for a Divide.

CHICAGO, May 17.—Martin White, a detective, has sued Paul Dresser, composer of "On the banks of the Wabash" and other popular songs, for $25,000. Several years ago, White says, Dresser agreed to give him half the receipts of the many popular songs he might publish, in return for financial aid given him then. It is charged in White's bill that Dresser has realized between $200,000 and $300,000 from songs, and has rendered no account to White.

Dresser says he has no money, as he has spent all that he made. He avers that White broke the contract.

His Arm Off.

The accident to Christian Smith noted in yesterday's COURIER resulted in the loss of his arm. It appears that in passing near the buzz saw they were using, his shirt sleeve was caught by the teeth of the saw and his arm jerked against it. In a flash, the work was done. The saw had struck at the elbow and had shattered the bones at the joint, cutting through so as to leave the arm hanging by only a piece of skin. As noted yesterday, Dr. Swarts was called, and went down, He amputated the arm above the elbow and the unfortunate man is doing as well as he can. But for a person of his age, the loss of an arm even under favorable circumstances, is a serious matter.

Storm at West Unity.

The cyclone near Montpelier Tuesday evening proves worse than at first reported. The greatest damage was at the school house at West Unity.

There were twenty-four persons in the building, and not one of them escaped without injury. The building was wrecked. The teacher, Miss Flossie Fisher, is probably fatally injured, being struck on the head with flying timbers. The following are the injured: Flossie Fisher, teacher, Florence Marzoff, aged 9; Nettie Marzoff, aged 7; Lucy Marzoff, aged 6; John Barton, aged 14. Stella Barton, aged 8; Florence Barton, aged 7; Joe Jacoby, aged 9; Nellie Meppens, aged 11 and Emery Flickinger.

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Tersely Told Telegraph Tales in Brief Paragraphs—Many Casualties—A Few Crimes—Some Fires—Political and Religious News.

Cyclone in Ohio.

Cleveland (Ohio) special: Another bad storm swept over Northern Ohio Wednesday afternoon, accompanied by high wind, hail and a heavy rainfall. At Norwalk and Bucyrus the rain fall was four inches. Trees were blown down, windows broken, and havoc caused among telegraph and telephone wires.

At Upper Sandusky several houses were unroofed.

A hurricane which swept over the city of Montpelier will prove fatal to four children in the school-house at West Unity. There were twenty-four people in the building, and not one escaped injury. The building was wrecked. The teacher, Miss Flossie Fisher, was injured. The following were fatally injured: Florence Marzoff, aged 9; Nettie Marzoff, aged 7; Lucy Marzoff, aged 6; Fay Borton, aged 14.

Ignored His Orders.

A New York World's special says Gen. Brooke was instructed by the President to insist that the arms of the Cubans be turned over to the officers of the United States army. Instead Gen. Brooke agreed with Gomez that the arms shall be surrendered to the mayors of Cuban cities.

Secretary Alger is highly indignant over Gen. Brooke's surprising disregard of the President's strict orders. He telegraphed to the President full details. It is generally conceded these developments in Cuba will greatly delay the distribution of the $3,000,000 to the Cuban army.

A Murderer Hanged.

At Norristown, Pa., James A. Clemmer was hanged for the murder of Mrs. Emma Kaiser, in October, 1896. Clemmer and Charles Kaiser, the woman's husband, conspired to get $10,000 insurance on her life. Clemmer shot her. Kaiser committed suicide while awaiting execution for complicity, Lizzie DeKalb, the famous "woman in black," in the case, though implicated, got a light sentence because she made a clean breast of the whole thing.

Manifesto by Gen. Gomez.

Havana special: Gen. Gomez has issued a manifesto advising all Cubans to lay down their arms in compliance with the American demands. Almost every town in the interior reports trouble resulting from hostilities toward American administration.

Man Charged with a Missouri Robbery is Found in Minnesota.

Lockridge, one of a gang who robbed the Savannah, Mo., bank in 1896 and who was supposed to have been drowned in Oregon after "jumping" his bond, is, according to the Kansas City police, in jail at Fergus Falls, Minn., under the name of W. C. Ross, awaiting trial for robbing a Northern Pacific train. In the Savannah robbery Lockridge, in company with Paddy McGraw, "Red" O'Brien and "Dutch" Webber, secured $450 and $14,000 worth of bonds. McGraw was soon caught and turned State's evidence. Lockridge was arrested in San Francisco while trying to sell his share of the bonds. O'Brien was caught in Portland, Ore., and Webber in Detroit, Mich. Lockridge received a five years' sentence, and while awaiting the result of an appeal disappeared. He was later reported drowned at Astoria, Ore.

FIRE UPON STREET CARS.

Bullets and Dynamite Figure in the Duluth Strike.

The street car strike at Duluth, Minn., assumed a serious look the other night. While an Interstate car was crossing the Duluth-Superior bridge it was fired upon twice by persons in a boat beneath the bridge. Both bullets passed through the front vestibule, within a few inches of the motorman's head. When the car reached the corner of Belknap street and Tower avenue, in Superior, the motorman was shot at four times by a man standing near the corner. He was immediately arrested. Dynamite was placed on the track on the Woodland line. It lifted the car from the tracks, broke the front wheels and trucks into bits and did considerable damage to the woodwork, but the charge was not heavy enough to turn the car over.

Flying Machine Is Tested.

Prof. S. P. Langley, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the inventor of the aerodrome, who was given $25,000 by the board of ordnance to experiment with his flying machine for war purposes, made his first test at Quantico, Va. Prof. Langley with the amount of money placed at his disposal, built a new and larger machine than that with which he experimented two years ago. The machine was launched from the top of a houseboat anchored in a broad sweep of the Potomac about three-quarters of a mile from the island owned by the Quantico Rod and Gun Club. The machine soared to a height of 500 feet, but descended after a horizontal flight of 800 feet. His former machine, which was propelled by a small steam engine, flew three-quarters of a mile, and only descended when the steam was exhausted. It was understood that Prof. Langley was to overcome the limited power capacity of the former machine by the use of a condensing engine, which could repeatedly utilize the condensed steam from the boiler.

As Viewed by Bradstreet's.

Bradstreet's latest report says: "Reports as to trade conditions are generally of a favorable tenor, notable among these being advanced quotations for many grades of iron and steel, increased activity in building lines reflected in heavy sales of lumber at prices tending upward, firmer tone in the cotton goods market sympathized in by the raw product, bank clearings surpassing all records for this week of the year, railroad earnings maintaining recent gains and business failures, as for some time past, down to the minimum. Offsetting these in some measure might be cited the reasonable quieting down of wholesale distributive demand, particularly for dry goods and clothing, but most notable of all the further weakening of cereal values. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 3,284,182 bushels, against 3,484,081 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 2,768,694 bushels, against 2,847,290 bushels last week."

They were found in the room of Guy C. Weed on Mission street in that city. Weed was formerly a copyist in the hospital detachment at the Presidio. He was arrested and charged with grand larceny. His roommate, C. Parker, Jr., says that the records show that each of the 400 soldiers in the hospital has been charged the limit of 60 cents a day for extra food, when, in fact, that amount was not expended. It is charged that the men have attempted to blackmail Maj. Mathews.

The attack, which occurred before daylight, was the result of their refusal to leave.

ALL TO HONOR DEWEY

HOMECOMING WILL BE CHEERED BY NATIONS.

Navies of the Great Powers Plan a Series of Demonstrations—England Will Ask a Visit by the Admiral's Flagship Olympia.

From present appearances the trip of Admiral Dewey from Manila to New York will be a demonstration of enthusiasm half way around the world. The inherent admiration for a true hero will manifest itself in outbursts of acclaim at every port in which the nervy little man from Vermont may choose to put his flagship. By the time he reaches New York City to receive the greatest ovation ever tendered to anybody he will have been the recipient of the tribute of nations.

The Suez canal, by which Admiral Dewey will come home, will bring him not only through the Asiatic waters, where there are numerous ships of war of other nations, but through the Mediterranean, where extensive squadrons of the navies of Europe are stationed.

Already Ambassador Cambon of France has sent official notification from Washington to Paris that Admiral Dewey is soon to sail from Manila, and of the probable sailing of the flagship Olympia past the French naval ports in Algiers. The flower of the French navy, which is gathered there, will show Dewey some stretches of enthusiasm that may prepare him for what he is due to get when he comes in sight of Sandy Hook.

Just opposite the French possessions in Algiers are the British naval stations at the entrance of the Mediterranean—Gibraltar and Malta—where it is certain that Admiral Dewey will put in to coal. What the Johnny Bull sea dogs will do to him is not a question of doubt. Not content with getting the hero to stop at this station, the English Government will try to get him to stop at Plymouth, the southern naval depot of England.

But the greeting of his foreign friends will not dull the edge of the reception to be accorded Admiral Dewey when he reaches New York. From all parts of the country dimes are pouring in to be melted down and made into the great loving cup to be presented to him in the name of the people who love him. It is to be a testimonial of the regard of the greatest naval hero of the age, presented by the great masses of Americans and not by a few men of wealth.

DEWEY AND THE OLYMPIA WILL BE HONORED BY NATIONS.

STILL DEFY FEDERAL COURTS.

Judges in a Missouri County Hold Their Court in the Woods.

The judges of St. Clair County, Mo., who for the last twenty years have preferred to spend their terms of office in jail rather than obey the order of the Federal courts to levy a tax to pay for bonds for a railroad, have again outwitted the United States marshals, and the levy is apparently as far off as ever. The county judges held court in the woods and are now in hiding.

The trouble arose thirty years ago, when the voters of St. Clair County voted to pay for bonds to build the Clinton branch of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad. The branch never was built, so the county judges refused to make the tax levy. The case was carried to the Federal courts, and the county was ordered to pay, but every judge elected had to be pledged to go to jail rather than impose the obnoxious tax, so they went to jail, and when they had served their terms were released, as being no longer in contempt.

The regular term of the County Court should have opened at Osceola Monday and knowing this several marshals and deputies came with attachments on the judges. It was the intention to take the latter before Judge Phillips at Kansas City, by whom they would have been committed for contempt. The judges, however, opened their term of court in the woods and thus deceived the marshals. They made the regular tax levy for the county in which, however, the levy for the railroad bonds was not included.

A GIGANTIC RAILWAY TRUST.

The Railways of Five States to Be Under One Management.

In the course of a few weeks it is expected that a railroad trust will control all the lines between Boston and Chicago. The principal object of the consolidation is to prevent rate cutting, and in this respect the trust will take the place of the Joint Traffic Association which the Supreme Court of the United States decided last fall was an illegal organization. The Vanderbilt, the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio lines each control a great many short lines, and these giants are now negotiating the trust which will virtually place under one executive management all the railways in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. While the lines will all be under one executive management each of the three big systems will directly control the smaller lines along its main arteries.

CUBANS ADVISED TO KEEP ARMS

Generals Assail United States and Pass Some Resolutions.

Two hundred and fifty representatives of the Cuban army, under the leadership of Gen. Mayia Rodrigues, held a meeting in Havana to discuss the question of disarmament. Among those present were Gens. Lacret, Leyte, Vidal, Secades and Bolet. The speakers were extremely bitter against the United States. Both Gen. Rodrigues and Gen. Lacret declared that it was the purpose of the United States to get possession of the Cubans' arms and then to force any terms they pleased on the island.

After much speechmaking a resolution was unanimously adopted, declaring that the Cubans would not lay down their arms, and that if an attempt was made to take them the Cubans would resist. Governor General Brooke is not alarmed over the situation.

SURGERY'S TRIUMPHS.

Patients Recovering After Losing One of the Jugular Veins.

Two operations of an extremely rare and dangerous character were performed during the last fortnight at the New York eye and ear infirmary, and the two patients, a boy and a girl, are on the road to recovery. The operation was the removal of one of the jugular veins, a surgical feat first attempted three years ago, and one in which more than 90 per cent of the cases have resulted fatally.

Madeline Burns, 17 years old, had more than four inches of her left jugular vein removed nine days ago, and is now certain of recovery, everything in her case working out favorably. William Jennings, 19 years old, was taken to the hospital suffering from necrosis of the bone behind the left ear. Three inches of diseased bone was removed from the patient's skull and an abscess in the brain was cut out. It was then seen that the removal of the left jugular vein was imperative, owing to the formation within it of three clots of blood, which, unless removed, would inevitably result in death.

During the operation the patient lost whatever consciousness had remained after the administration of the drugs, and twice his pulse disappeared altogether. By means of injections and artificial respiration the patient was restored and the operation concluded, and it is now considered reasonably certain that he will recover.

In both of these cases the right jugular vein will be compelled to do double duty, and should both survive the patients will increase the number of those who in the whole world are living with one jugular to five. According to the medical records, only three have survived hitherto.

DR. BRIGGS IS ORDAINED.

Former Presbyterian Is Admitted to Episcopal Priesthood.

Standing before the altar of the procathedral, in Stanton street, New York, Sunday morning, Bishop Potter read the prescribed words from "The Form and Manner of Ordaining Priests," in the book of common prayer of the Protestant Episcopal Church. In front of him were two candidates for the priesthood, one of them a man whose admission into the church it was expected would cause a vast commotion—Dr. Charles A. Briggs, the Union Theological Seminary professor, who has been accused of being a heretic because he doubted certain passages in the Bible.

The clergymen who objected to the ordination made no protest against Dr. Briggs in the procathedral. They were not there. No one else rose in the church to make any objection. Rev. D. Van Winkle of St. Clement's, Rev. F. M. Clendennin of St. Peter's, Westchester, and Rev. D. B. F. Da Costa, who so rigorously opposed the reception of the Presbyterian minister into the field, took no steps toward interfering with the ceremony.

The church was crowded. There were many curiosity seekers, who believed that something in the way of a "scene" might occur, but the bulk of those present were parishioners. There were numbers of clergymen of different denominations in the congregation.

BOERS LOOK FOR WAR.

Burghers Are Told to Immediately Prepare for Battle.

The correspondent of the London Daily Mail at Cape Town says: "At a meeting of the commandants on the western border of the Transvaal instructions were issued to the burghers to prepare to take the field at a moment's notice from Pretoria. The work of fortifying the redoubts and the hilltops at points of strategic importance is progressing rapidly. The negotiations are still pending for the proposed meeting between President Krueger and Sir Alfred Milner, governor of Cape Colony and British high commissioner for south Africa. Mr. Chamberlain, British colonial secretary, it is said, will not assent to the conference, which had been arranged to take place at Bloemfontein at the end of the month, unless the Transvaal executive pledges himself to initiate bona fide reforms."

CUBANS SHOW ANGER.

DON'T WANT TO SURRENDER THEIR ARMS.

Trouble Over Their Disarming Has Caused Some Anxiety in War Department—Fighting Against Brooke's Troops Deemed Not Impossible.

Special dispatches from Washington indicate that there are differences between the Cubans and Americans of a nature so tense that only the greatest tact and ability, coupled with a compromising disposition on both sides, will be able to solve them without results of a grave nature. This seems to be the opinion at the War Department, although officials refuse to discuss the situation publicly. There is less criticism of Gen. Gomez than there was. It is believed that the old general is still pro-American, but that the opposition of the other Cuban generals has discouraged him.

Although the course of Gen. Brooke is not approved in all its details by his superiors, there is no disposition to criticise him for demanding that the Cubans give up their arms. This measure is approved as a necessary one, and if all differences of opinion are to be traceable to this order it is quite likely that Brooke will be sustained by the home Government. But the threat to disarm the former Cuban soldiers by force, if necessary, is not approved, the policy being to placate rather than irritate, and Gen. Brooke, more than likely, will be advised to keep this policy firmly in mind.

GENERAL BROOKE.

A conflict with the Cubans is not desired, and will be avoided, if possible. It is said that President McKinley has been informed of the situation by Gen. Alger, and that the President himself will take a hand in unraveling the knotted skeins. The Cubans must be treated with great patience. They lack stability of purpose and other sterling characteristics. Recognition of this fact is deemed requisite in handling the questions that have arisen. Washington advices say that the Government is prepared to establish its authority in Cuba at all hazards, although anxious to avoid conflict. Such conflict, it is generally conceded, would postpone indefinitely the independence of the island.

Secretary Alger cabled Gen. Brooke asking him for a statement as to the reported troubles in Cuba. Of the charges against Gen. Brooke made by the Cubans, the Secretary said not one of these had yet been made, and added: "People who are put under a necessary restraint are apt to complain of undue restraint."

The Cubans say they are willing to give up their arms to Cuban officials, but under no circumstances will they yield them to the Americans. They point to the fact that every move by the Americans tends to Americanize the island. Americans are favored for government positions; American signs go over the new offices, and the American grip is tightening on everything. Cubans feel that they are being browbeaten and forced into the background. They are ready to fight again for independence if it is necessary. War, they say, is not desired, but unless an honorable proposition is made promptly it cannot be averted.

CHINA CLASHES WITH BRITAIN.

Russia Is Also Arousing the Ire of the Celestials.

Great Britain's warships and soldiers are in full possession of Kow Loon, occupying a position just opposite the city. The present trouble is the result of a sudden renewal of the native opposition to British control of the ceded territory. In addition to the large military and naval expedition now in the field, the volunteers have been notified to be in readiness for any emergency. Troops are patrolling the European quarter of Kow Loon. It is reported that Chinese rebels from Tung-Kung invaded British territory, and that two armed gangs robbed the city of Kow Loon. Hong Kong itself is quiet. The territory back of the hinterland is also disturbed, and Chinese troops have been sent there.

The Russian demand for a new railway concession connecting Pekin with Russia's present railroad system in Manchuria is still exciting the gravest anxiety. The Germans and Japanese are particularly uneasy on the subject of this unexpected move upon the part of the Russians, and it is said that there is a feeling among the prominent Chinese that the moment has come to make every effort in the direction of securing British sympathy and aid.

AGUINALDO IN HIDING.

Filipino Leader Has Not Been Heard From for Two Weeks.

Aguinaldo is said to have fled into the province of Neuva Ecija. Nothing has been heard of him for over two weeks. It is believed by Gregorio Pilar, the insurgent general, that the Filipino leader has been deserted by the government. The Spanish prisoners, about 5,000 in number, have been carried into a northern province, and are thought to be beyond American assistance at present.

Five American prisoners were carried through San Miguel, but their names are unknown. The natives have forced their general to countermand the orders that all villages should be burned as they retreated. Gens. MacArthur and Lawton are preparing for an extensive forward movement. All forces are being strengthened in every possible manner.

SAN ISIDRO IS TAKEN.

Gen. Lawton's Advance Led by Col. Summers Captures the Town.

Gen. Lawton's advance guard, under Col. Summers of the Oregon troops, took San Isidro, an insurgent capital, Wednesday morning. Summers' command, consisting of the Twenty-second infantry on the left, the Minnesota regiment in the center and the Oregon and North Dakota regiments on the right, preceded by scouts and accompanied by Scott's battery of artillery, advanced from Balnarte. The troops first encountered the enemy two miles from San Isidro, the rebels retiring when our artillery opened fire. Just outside the town a rebel force, estimated to number 2,000 men, was intrenched. It made a slight resistance, but left its position when our troops turned its right flank. The enemy's loss was fifteen men killed and twenty wounded. On the American side one soldier of the Oregon regiment and one of the Minnesota regiment were slightly wounded. After capturing the town Col. Summers' troops continued their advance, pursuing the retreating rebels several miles.

"TINCLAD" GUNBOAT LAGUNA DE BAY.

The expedition under Maj. Kebbe of the Third artillery, consisting of the Seventeenth infantry, a battalion of the Ninth and one battery of the First artillery, left Calumpit, marching up the Rio Grande to Gen. Lawton's division at Arayal. A flotilla of cascoes loaded with supplies also proceeded up the river. Both forces were convoyed by the "tinclad" army gunboats under Captain Grant.

KRUGER FINDS A PLOT.

Seven Men Declared to Be Working Up a Revolution.

Seven men, nearly all of whom are former British officers, were arrested at Johannesburg on the charge of high treason against the Transvaal republic. Further warrants have been issued, many prominent men being involved in the alleged conspiracy. According to the authorities, incriminating documents were found on the prisoners, showing that they are enrolling men to cause a rebellion. Two thousand men are said to have been enlisted. It is asserted that the officers arrested were also preparing to organize a corps in Natal, the British colony between the Orange Free State and the Indian ocean, to assist the projected movement at Johannesburg.

The news of the arrest caused great excitement. All but one of the prisoners recently served in the British army. None of them has been in the employ of the British South Africa Chartered Company. They arrived at Pretoria on a special train from Johannesburg. After they had been lodged in jail they were visited by the British diplomatic agent. The arrests were effected by a detective who joined the movement which, it is asserted, was for the purpose of enrolling men in order to cause an outbreak of rebellion. It is said that the commissioner of police, who had the affair in hand, had been working up the case four months.

CURRENT COMMENT

An estimate of what the news costs a big newspaper and how it travels may be derived from the telegraphic tolls charged for transmission. The expense of telegraphing war news from Manila is at the rate of $2.35 a word. From Manila to New York the cable route is: Manila to Hong Kong, thence to Saigon in Anam, Singapore, the Straits of Settlements and Penang, on the Malay peninsula, to Madras, India; thence by Eastern Telegraph cable to Aden in Arabia, to Port Said and Alexandria in Egypt; Malta, Gibraltar, Lisbon and Plymouth, England; from Plymouth by Commercial cable to Waterville, Ireland, and Canso, Nova Scotia, to New York.

News comes that during the last winter the submergence of Sable Island by the ocean has proceeded rapidly. Sable Island, which lies eighty-five miles east of Nova Scotia and in the track of ocean steamers, is the most notorious spot in the world for shipwrecks. In the last ninety years more than 150 ships have been wrecked on its treacherous shoals, and two lighthouses placed on the island by the Canadian Government have been washed away by the ocean. During all these years it has been gradually sinking under the water, until now the island is not much more than one-third as large as it was at the beginning of the century.

During the month of April there was a remarkable falling off in the exports of agricultural products, provisions, including cattle and hogs, showing a reduction of $1,507,933 and breadstuffs $12,297,517 as compared with the same month last year. Cotton exports dropped $6,327,454, thus making a total shrinkage for the month in products from field and farm of $24,952,425. The exports of breadstuffs for April were smaller than for any month since July, 1897.

The payment of a dividend of one-fifth of 1 per cent to the creditors of the Iron Hall winds up a failure which involved 63,000 members scattered through more than twenty States. When a receiver was appointed it was found that the liabilities of the order were $5,100,000. Altogether $2,000,000 has been collected and paid to creditors, leaving a permanent deficit of $3,100,000.

For the maintenance of the life-saving service the people of this country pay about $1,500,000 a year. Of 3,967 lives imperiled in coast shipwrecks last year, only 23 were lost; of the $7,168,590 worth of property imperiled, the life-saving service rescued $6,420,590 worth.

FOR GARRISON DUTY.

Upon the transport's decks we wind,
Five hundred men and more;
A cheering weeping crowd behind,
A long, long voyage before.
"Good luck, old chap!" "Farewell, dear heart!"
"We're off! Hurra, hurra!"
Beneath the bows the ripples part,
At last we're under way.

And many a young lieutenant sighs,
And thinks of yester eve;
And many a private wipes his eyes
Upon a dusty sleeve.
But every heart is brave and true,
In tune with duty's call;
Let home and kindred fade from view,
Stanch soldiers are we all.

O'er seashore post and mountain fort,
And sand and prairie flowers,
The winds that with the colors sport
Will miss the kiss of ours;
While men who chased Apache Kid,
And fought at Wounded Knee,
Must now recount the deeds they did
For ears across the sea.

We change the oak and pine for palm,
The cactus spike for cane;
And "taps," the soldier's evening psalm,
The echoes woo in vain.
But tho' mid alien scenes we stand,
An alien sky above,
From here, as from our motherland,
Floats out the flag we love.

The Wager.

A CONTEST IN WHICH SCIENCE HAD NO SHOW.

By Charles Dwight Willard.

There were five of us in the party—six, counting Long Tom, the guide. After two days' hard climbing, which the burros endured with exemplary fortitude, we arrived at the little valley high up in the mountains, through which threaded the trout-stream.

"Jest you all go over into the cabin there and make yourself comf'ble, while I 'tend to gettin' this stuff unpacked," said Long Tom; "there ain't no one there. My pardner, he's down below."

"The cabin appears to be two cabins," said the colonel, as we approached it.

"That is for economy in ridge-poles," said the doctor; "sleeping apartments on one side and kitchen on the other. In the space between, you keep your fishing-tackle and worms."

We entered the right-hand section of the twin cabin, which proved to be the kitchen side. There was not much furniture—a table of hewn logs, a chair of bent saplings, and a rough bench.

However, we did not notice such furniture as there was, for each member of the party, as he stepped over the high threshold, had his attention instantly attracted by the stove, and a brief roundelay of ejaculations went the group.

"Well, that staggers me," said the stock-broker.

"H'm," said the professor, in a mysterious tone, and rubbed his chin.

The stove was a plain, small cooking range, rather old and rusty. The strange thing about it was its position. Its abbreviated legs stood upon large cedar posts, which were planted in the floor and were over four feet in height. This brought the stove away up in mid-air, so that the top was about on a level with the face of the colonel, and he was a six-footer.

We formed in a circle about the stove stared at it as solemnly as a group of priests around a sacrificial tripod. We felt of the posts—they were firm and solid, showing that the mysterious arrangement was a permanent, not a temporary one. Then we all bent our necks and opened our mouths to look up at the hole in the roof through which the stove-pipe vanished.

Suddenly the stockbroker burst out into a laugh.

"Oh, I understand it now," said he.

"Understand what?" asked the colonel, sharply.

"Why Long Tom has his stove hoisted up so high from the floor."

"So do I," said the doctor; "but I suspect that my explanation is not the same that any one else would offer."

"Well, I will bet that I am right," said the stock-broker, "and put up the money."

"I am in this," said the judge; "I have a clear idea about that stove and will back it."

"I want to take a hand," said the colonel.

The stock-broker drew a small yellow coin out of his pocket and dropped it on the table.

"He has the stove up there," he said, "to get a better draught. In this rarefied mountain air there is only a small amount of oxygen to the cubic inch, and combustion is more difficult to secure than in the lower latitudes. I have heard that if you get high enough up you can't cook an egg—that is, I mean, water won't boil—or something like that," he continued, thrown into sudden confusion by the discovery that the professor's eye was fixed upon him with a sarcastic gaze.

"Is that supposed to be science?" demanded the professor.

"Well," said the stock-broker, doggedly, "never mind the reasons. Experience is probably good enough for Long Tom. He finds that he gets a better draught for his stove by having it up in mid-air, so he has it there."

"The right explanation," began the professor, "is the simplest. My idea is that——"

"Excuse me," interrupted the stock-broker, tapping the table; "are you in this?"

The professor made a deposit, and proceeded:

"Have you noticed that our host is a very tall man? Like most men of his height, he hates to bend over. If the stove were near the floor, he would have to stoop down low when he whirled a flap-jack or speared a rasher of bacon. Now he can stand up and do it with ease. Your draught theory is no good; the longer the pipe, if it is straight, the better the fire will burn."

"Professor," remarked the colonel, "I regret to have to tell you that your money is gone. Long Tom told me, on the way up, that his partner did all the cooking, and he is a man of rather short stature." The colonel then paid his compliments to the jack-pot, and continued: "Now, my idea is that the stove heats the room better there than on the floor. It is only a cooking-stove, to be sure, but when the winter is cold it makes this room comfortable. Being up in the middle of the space it heats it all equally well, which it could not do if it were down below."

The doctor greeted this theory with a loud laugh. "Colonel," he said, "you are wild—way off the mark. Hot air rises, of course, and the only way to disseminate it is to have your stove as low as possible. According to your idea, it would be a good plan to put the furnace in the attic of a house instead of in the basement."

"I think," said the colonel, "that I could appreciate your argument better if you would ante."

"The pot is mine," said the doctor, as he deposited his coin; "you will all adopt my idea the moment you hear it, and Long Tom, who will be here in a minute, will bear me out. This room is very small; it has but little floor-space, and none of it goes to waste. Now, if he had put the stove down where we expected to find it, Long Tom could not have made use of the area underneath, as you will see he has done. On all sides of the supporting posts you will notice there are hooks, on which he hangs his pans and skillets. Underneath there is a kitchen-closet for pots and cooking-utensils of various sorts. What could be more convenient? Under your ordinary stove there is room only for a poker and a few cockroaches."

The judge, who had been listening to the opinions offered by the others with the same grim smile that occasionally ornamented his face when he announced that an objection was overruled now stepped forward and dropped a coin on the table. He then rendered his decision as follows:

"It appears that none of you have noticed the forest of hooks in the roof just over the stove. They are not in use at present, but they are there for some purpose. I imagine that during the winter huge pieces of venison and bear's-meat dangle over the stove, and are dried for use later. Now, if the stove were on the floor, it would be too far from the roof to be of service in this way."

"Here comes old Tom," shouted the colonel, who had stepped to the open door while the judge was speaking.

The old trapper put down the various articles of baggage with which his arms were loaded and came into the kitchen-cabin where we all stood. He glanced at the group and then at the stilted stove in our midst.

"I see you air all admirin' my stove," said he, "and I'll bet you've been a-wonderin' why it is up so high."

"Yes, we have," said the professor; "how did you know it?"

"People most allus generally jest as soon as they come into the place begin to ask me about it—that's how I knowed."

"Well, why is it up so high?" demanded the stock-broker, impatiently, with a side glance at the well-developed jack-pot on the table.

"The reason's simple enough," said Long Tom, with a grin that showed his bicuspids; "you see we had to pack all the stuff up here from down below on burros. Originally there was four j'ints of that stove-pipe, but the cinch wasn't drawed tight enough on the burro that was carryin' them, and two of 'em slipped out and rolled down the mountain. When we got here and found that there wasn't but two pieces left, I reckoned that I would have to kinder h'st the stove to make it fit the pipe—so I jest in and h'isted her. And thar she is. Say, what's all this here money on the table for?"

There was a deep silence, which lasted so long that Tom ventured to repeat his question about the money.

"It is a 'all handsin,'" said the doctor, sadly, "and as near as I can make out it belongs to you."—San Francisco Argonaut.

IN SUPERSTITIOUS INDIA.

Method Adopted to Propitiate an Engine That Was Cranky.

India is a country where the gross superstitions prevailing among the natives frequently produce the most horrible and inconceivable tragedies. Many of these are done in secret, but now and then they come to light, and give a startling reminder to the Englishmen in India that "east is east and west is west," and never the two shall meet." In the up-country town of Hingoli, in the Deccan, is a cotton-ginning mill owned by natives. One of the proprietors, a Parsee named Nowrojee, looks after the engines and machinery of the mill. Lately the machinery has not been working well, and the engine in particular has given considerable trouble. The native engineers seem to have got it into their heads that the engine was really driven by a god which took the form of steam. When it went wrong they thought the god was angry and needed propitiating by the sacrifice of a human being. One night a Hindu laborer named Govindah was passing the mill. Some workmen sitting in the yard smoking called out to him to join them. The gang had just been discussing the vagaries of the engine and the necessity for offering a human sacrifice to it. The whole party walked toward the boiler, and some of the men seized Govindah. Others swung open the furnace door, and the man was crammed inside, head first. They had to loose their hold of his body in order to shut the furnace door, whereupon Govindah, who was a very powerful man, managed to get out and free himself. He was frenzied with pain and fear and had sustained ghastly injuries. The engineers did not make a second attempt to thrust him in the furnace and he crawled away to his hut. His faithful wife tended him all night, and took him in the morning to the local hospital, where it was found that he was horribly burned about the head, arms and chest, parts being absolutely charred. He died of tetanus. Nowrojee and one of the engineers have been arrested.—Chicago Record.

STANDING ROOM ONLY

THAT WILL BE THE COUNTRY'S CONDITION IN YEAR 2000.

Increase in Population Will Soon Absorb All Territory in the United States, Giving Only an Average of an Acre to One Person.

If the population of the United States continues to increase at the rate that has prevailed during the last twenty years in the year 2000 it will reach so great a density there will be room for an average of only one person to an acre in the vast area. If the rate of increase shall advance as the rate has advanced during the last fifty years, that alarming density will have been reached many decades earlier.

It seems impossible to believe that a territory which a century ago seemed so immense that no prophet could have foreseen that it could be filled up within many centuries by any ordinary migratory phenomenon, has already come to the point where "standing room only" is only a question of years. Yet the pregnant totals of the census department for the last century impose that inevitable conclusion.

These figures (in round numbers) are as follows:

1790	4,000,000	1860	31,000,000
1800	5,000,000	1880	50,000,000
1830	13,000,000	1890	75,000,000
1850	23,000,000

In the time of Washington, with a population of only 4,000,000, and with a total area less than at the present time, there was yet only one person to the square mile. In Jefferson's administration in 1800 the density had grown to an average of two to the square mile. Thirty years later, in the Jacksonian period, it had doubled again to four persons to the square mile. Two decades later, in the time of Fillmore, it had advanced to seven. When Lincoln was President his people were scattered at the rate of nine to the square mile. In Garfield's time it had advanced to fourteen, while at the present time it is computed that the population averages about twenty-one persons to the square mile.

When the first census was taken, on the first Monday in August, 1790, the population was confined entirely to the Atlantic seaboard. Not more than 5 per cent. of the population was west of the Appalachian system. The greatest density was in eastern Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut and about New York City. Twenty years later, at the census of 1810, the population had begun to spread westward. The central portions of New York State were filling up, the Ohio River was lined with settlements, and St. Louis had grown into an important center from a mere fur trading post, which had been its previous status. In this decade, however, in 1803, the population had taken a stride forward by the transfer to the jurisdiction of the United States of the section now known as Louisiana. The territory included in this transfer was immense, comprising close to 1,200,000 square miles. In the same time the nation had acquired from Georgia the territory comprising the larger part of the State of Alabama and Mississippi, and the Territory of Illinois had been formed, including all of the present State and that of Wisconsin and a part of Michigan. At this time the accepted western frontier line of the country was about 3,000 miles long and embraced an area of about 400,000 square miles.

In the period between 1810 and 1820 there were many territorial changes, causing a marked alteration in the frontier line, the surest index to the giant strides in the population. A statistician thus describes it at the end of this period: "The frontier line in 1820 extended from southeastern Michigan on Lake St. Clair, southward into what is now Missouri; thence making a great semi-circle to the eastward, it sweeps west again around a body of population in Louisiana, and ends on the gulf coast in that State. The area included by it has immensely increased, but much of this increase is balanced by the great extent of unsettled land included within it." Outside of this frontier line there was yet practically no settlement excepting small settlements on the Arkansas, White and Washita Rivers in Arkansas.

After the lapse of another decade, reaching now into the historic Jacksonian period, Florida had become a part of the Union and the tide of empire had pushed on resistlessly. Missouri had been carved out of the southeastern corner of the old Missouri Territory and admitted as a State. Settlement in other quarters has continued to spread, yet it is proper to state that as the decade from 1810 to 1820 was one for blocking out work, so the succeeding ten years was a period for filling in and completing that work. The point furthest west at this time was the present site of Kansas City, Mo., and its surrounding territory, where quite a dense body of population appeared.

Meanwhile the unsettled parts of such Eastern States as New York, Pennsylvania and Virginia were narrowing. The total settled area was now 600,000 square miles.

Michigan and Arkansas had made their bow to the union ten years later

—by 1840—and the Indians, who had delayed civilization in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, were pushed onward to the Indian Territory, leaving those States open to settlement. Similarly the Sacs, and Foxes, and the Pottawatomies had been urged by Uncle Sam's iron hand to seek camping grounds further to the west. This left northern Illinois and the territory tributary to Chicago free to the agriculturist. Florida was invaded by a new army of settlers. The settled area of the nation had increased in the decade 200,000 square miles.

Texas and the region involved in the Guadeloupe-Hidalgo treaty were acquired by the expansive government before 1850 came around. More States were admitted to the Union and new Territories were organized. Along the northern Mississippi River settlements sprung up rapidly. The discovery of gold in California made it necessary to draw the population circles around that far western part of the nation. The inhabited portion of the country now comprised approximately a million square miles. In 1860 the territorial changes included the acquisition of that strip of Arizona and New Mexico south of the Gila River. New Territories continued to be formed, now being molded out of the unsettled parts of the Cordilleran region into Utah and Washington. This period witnessed for the first time in the settlement of Kansas and Nebraska a considerable movement of population beyond the Missouri River. Even in northern Maine, with its uninviting rocks, there is a noticeable progress of civilization. Along the gulf coast there is no change.

In spite of the war the succeeding decade—ending in 1870—was one of growth. Kansas, Nevada and Nebraska were admitted as States, and half a dozen Territories were organized. West Virginia took on its separate identity. The State of Michigan took a notable "boom." The total area of population had reached 1,200,000 square miles. This was advanced to 1,500,000 by 1880, in the lapse of another decade. In this later period that part of the country which made greatest strides in population was the Kansas-Nebraska region.

In tracing this growth of population it is curious to note that within the settled portions of the country there are several sections which have remained practically virgin. About 12,000 square miles of territory in the northern part of Maine are almost without habitation. The Adirondack region in northern New York is another section which offers serious obstacles to settlement. In northern Michigan and Wisconsin, also sparsely settled, the situation is about the same. Densely wooded lands and severe climate have scared off the settler and invited only the logger, who enjoys practically a monopoly of the territory. In all these sections where within territory that is thickly populated there lie distinct regions passed by the immigrant the same condition of slow and rapidly accelerating absorption prevails. The encroachments year by year are growing in pace, and with the taking up of the prairie land of the West these cold and wooded sections will come within the range of the explorer's vision.

ELECTRIC FIRE BALL.

If the Operator Had Touched It He Would Have Been Electrocuted.

"Electricity is like a mule in one respect," said a veteran operator. "You can never tell just when it's going to get up on its front legs and kick you into the middle of next week. I remember, years ago, when I was night chief operator at the office in Richmond, Va., a very strange thing happened. I was sitting at my table one night at about 11 o'clock, waiting for it to stop raining, when I could go home. There was a big storm up the line, and while we didn't feel it to any great extent in the city, the lightning had been playing the mischief with the wires in the office, and several of the connections had burnt out. All of a sudden I heard a strange snapping sound at my instrument, and the next thing I knew a flash of bluish white fire lit up the whole room. Then a globe of flame about the size of an orange seemed to spring from the armature and began to roll slowly from over the top of the table. As nearly as I can describe the thing, it was like a globule of molten metal, glowing through and through with incandescent fire and shimmering with every color of the rainbow. It was beautiful to look at and fascinated me like a snake. Moreover, it seemed as fragile as a bubble—as if a touch would shiver it to atoms—and without thinking I reached for it with a wooden ruler. Luckily my assistant had more sense, and he yelled at me so frantically that I stopped before I touched it. Just then the fiery ball reached the edge and rolled off. As it struck the floor it shattered like a drop of quicksilver and suddenly disappeared. When I recovered my senses and looked at the table I was shocked. The instrument was a wreck, and the track of the electric apparition was charred into the wood half an inch deep. If I had prodded it I wouldn't be telling the story, for the ruler had a metal edge, and I certainly would have been electrocuted then and there. I have heard of such balls of fire from a few old operators, but that's the only one I ever saw, and I'm not yearning to see another. Nobody has ever been able to explain them. Of course the time I speak of was before the introduction of improved current arresters, and nowadays such visitors are pretty effectively barred out."—Kansas City Star.

CONSUMPTION OF LIQUOR.

In France There Is One Saloon to Every Thirty Adults.

Statistics presented at the recent anti-alcoholic congress in Paris showed that in France there is one saloon for every thirty adults. Every man, woman and child in France consumes, on the average, the equivalent of sixteen quarts of alcohol each year. The inhabitants of Belgium and Germany come next with a consumption of twelve quarts. In England the consumption per inhabitant is 10.5 quarts; in Switzerland, 10 quarts; in Italy, 7.4; in Holland, 7.1; in the United States, 7; in Sweden, 5; in Norway, 3.4; and in Canada, 2.25. In France and Belgium the amount of alcohol consumed yearly is increasing; in Holland, England and Italy it is stationary; in all the other countries it is gradually diminishing.

Donald Got It.

In a small village on the west coast of Scotland there was a natural called Donald, who did odd jobs, especially about the hotel. One afternoon three gentlemen were standing in front of the hotel, and along with them a small terrier, when Donald happened to pass. Wishing to have a joke at his expense, one of them, taking out a half crown, said:

"If you get this you may keep it." Then, calling to the dog to "fetch," he flung it away. The dog got it first; but Donald, not to be done out of his half-crown, picked up a stone, and calling the dog's attention flung it a piece away. The dog immediately dropped the half-crown and tore after the stone, when Donald quietly lifted and pocketed the coin.

Having eaten breakfast, the American in Cuba goes about the affairs of the day. He generally starts in with a good American rush, perspires for two hours, gets exhausted and irritated and lands in a hammock or at the American Club before 1 o'clock. And if there is any one to listen to him he gives it as his best judgment that any one who would live in Cuba or even allow himself to be born there is a fool.

A ROMANTIC CAREER.

The Story of an American Viscountess in England.

Of all the beautiful and wealthy American girls who have contracted matrimonial alliances with titled Europeans few have had so romantic a career as Viscountess Deerhurst, who recently presented an heir to her distinguished husband.

Viscountess Deerhurst, who is accounted one of the most beautiful women of Europe, and who was also an heiress of great wealth when she married, was an Illinois girl by birth, and her earliest years were ones of humble life. Her birthplace was a farm in Fulton County, near Farmington, and about twenty miles west of the city of Peoria. Her father's name was William Daniel, but this was a fact known to only a few people when the beautiful and accomplished Virginia Bonynge, a name that subsequently came to her, was launched in London society with all the advantages that nature had lavished upon her, supplemented by the fascination of prospective millions. Her success was instantaneous, and it was not long before she had the eligibles of Great Britain's exclusive set at her feet. She was taken up by royalty itself, in the person of Princess Christian, and her presentation to the Queen stamped her position in the great world of fashionable and exclusive society.

About this time came an event in Virginia Bonynge's career which nearly wrecked her life and happiness, and the shock of which prostrated her for weeks with brain fever, and brought her near death's door. Among the horde of suitors that besieged her was a nobleman of high title, a long and lofty lineage, and of distinguished and unblemished character. His suit prospered, and soon his engagement to Miss Bonynge was announced. A few weeks after the engagement was announced ugly rumors began to circulate in London society about Miss Bonynge. These were to the effect that she was not the daughter of the millionaire whose name she bore, but that her origin had been of the most lowly nature, and that her father, after having served a term of imprisonment for murder, had wound up his career by committing suicide. Miss Bonynge's noble fiance heard these rumors, and he investigated them. Their accuracy was acknowledged by Mr. and Mrs. Bonynge, and he broke the engagement, without an instant's hesitation or even an interview with the girl whose affections he had gained.

London society was, of course, scandalized, but some of the royal family declared it outrageous to visit the sins of a father on his innocent offspring, and as the favor of royalty in England outranks in importance the disfavor of all other classes the Bonynges maintained their position and outlived the venom of slander.

It is necessary here to tell how Virginia Bonynge, daughter of a murderer and suicide, had been transformed into the child of a millionaire and an ornament of English society. Her father's name was William Daniel. He was a gardener in England, who had married a housemaid. Together they had come to America to seek their fortune. Daniel and his wife worked their way from New York across the continent, stopping for a time at Farmington, Ill., where they tried to run a quarter section of land. It was while here, on the prairies of Illinois, that the Viscountess Deerhurst was born, twenty-five years ago.

William Daniel did not prosper as a farmer. He decided to go to California to dig for gold. Crossing the Rocky Mountains in those days was not what it is now, especially for people who know what it is to want for money. The journey entailed many hardships for Daniel and his little family. Once on the Pacific slope he went to work as a common miner, whose only capital was determination to succeed and a strong constitution, and whose only tools were his brawny arms. It was a rough community. Almost every man's hand was uplifted against his neighbor in the endeavor to protect himself. One day Daniel got into a fracas. He killed a man, was tried and sentenced to imprisonment.

While Daniel was in prison Bonynge, then a struggling miner, met Daniel's wife. She procured a divorce and the couple were married. Virginia Daniel then became Virginia Bonynge.

Bonynge struck it rich and became one of California's bonanza kings. Daniel's wife and daughter lived in luxury, while Daniel ate his heart out in a prison cell. He never knew until he was freed that wife and daughter were lost to him forever.

When he was pardoned he went back to the scene of his crime in search of those he had left behind. They had disappeared. But some remained who were able to put him upon their track. He learned the truth, and it killed the little courage and manhood left after his imprisonment. He plunged into deeper crime, drank to excess, and finally died by his own hand.

In the meantime the Bonynges had removed to London. They found American wealth powerful, and, when reenforced by the charms of a beautiful daughter, irresistible. Then came the shock of the revelations of Daniel's career.

Soon after this period the Viscount Deerhurst became a suitor for the hand of Miss Bonynge. He was accepted, and in a short time the miner's daughter became Viscountess Deerhurst. Her life since has been a happy one.

Tom Reed's Double.

Tom Reed has a double. The General and I were riding from New York to Boston in the smoking compartment of the Bay State Limited. Enter the double. He sat opposite, smoked a good cigar, and when we ordered refreshment followed suit. At New Haven he inquired, "What place is this, sir?" I told him, and the conversation was started—as usual under such circumstances. When we had gotten warmed together I said that he reminded me of an old friend. He laughed. "You mean Speaker Reed?" he said. "I have never met him. The other day I visited Washington and was arrested in Pennsylvania avenue by a man who took me by the hand and exclaimed: 'Why, how are you, Mr. Speaker? When did you get back?' I informed him that he had made a mistake; that I was not the Speaker. 'Oh, you can't fool me, Tom,' he continued. 'What's the matter? Up to some quiet game?' I had the hardest kind of work convincing him I was not Mr. Reed. Since coming East I have had scores of people to point me out as the big man from Maine."

An Opinion from St. Louis.

The St. Louis Republic says that Alabastine bids fair to give Grand Rapids, Mich., even more fame than her huge furniture factories. This is a covering for walls and ceilings, and takes the place of kalsomines, which are very objectionable and even dangerous on account of the constantly decaying animal and vegetable matter which they contain. Alabastine makes a pure and permanent covering, that can be recoated. It sets on the wall, growing hard with age.

A Welshman who was in London a couple of weeks ago lost his watch, and told the Scotland Yard people about it. They said they would leave no stone unturned to find the watch.

The other day the Welshman went up again to London; he saw street after street turned up, and was told that in all thirty-six miles of roads were in the same condition.

He rushed down to Scotland Yard, and said, "I didn't think I was giving you all that trouble. If you don't find the watch by Sunday I wouldn't break up any more."—Scottish Leader.

AUBURN WEEKLY COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MAY 25, 1899.

NEW DAILY

Butler has a daily paper, the Evening Journal just started by O. H. Downey. We do not know why it should not live, but that depends mainly on the amount of hard work devoted to it and the perseverance of its publisher. The price is put at 6 cents a week, which he says is so much less than that of Auburn papers, which charge ten cents. He must remember however, that the COURIER sends out with its own edition, the Indianapolis Daily Sentinel, a city paper equal to the best, and which alone is sold everywhere else at 10 cents to 12 cents a week. So the COURIER gives many times the value of the Dispatch for the same money, and still more when compared with the Butler Journal, But we believe the plan the Journal has adopted, is the true one for a daily in a small town and hope to see it succeed.

DEKALB'S FRUIT

—Prof. Troop who was in tne country the last of the week, found the condition of fruit trees in DeKalb, very poor. He says orchards of apples have been nearly ruined by neglecting to kill the cankerworms. He found some indications that there had been San Jose scale on fruit trees near St. Joe, but the owner had been waging war on them and he thinks the danger is over. He says the apple crop of the county will be large this summer, but the fruit will be of little value as there is so much cankerworm affecting them. He thinks this would be a good fruit section if people would take pains to fight the fruit pests. He has been over the state a good deal and finds poor wheat prospects, except some parts of Central and Southern Indiana.

Got There at Last

We have for many years watched the editor of the Columbia City Mail, and wondered that decent people would stand his brutal abuse. If a man differed from him on any subject, at once the torrents of his wrath were poured over that man's devoted head. True his abuse was not as constant as what we used to regret in the Garrett Clipper, but it was just as brutal and abusive. Lately he has been turning his mud batteries on the city marshal, and that officer, after standing it as long as he could, came to the editor and told him the abuse must stop. Williamson drew a revolver and a lively fight ensued, ending in several whacks on both sides, and the interference of friends. We regret to see violence of any sort, but when an editor so far abuses his rights to assail people in his paper, and refuses to stop, or to make retraction when he is wrong, then there seems to be no other way than to meet brute force with brute force. We doubt if the editor will settle down into anything like decency. But if he does not we look for some outraged individual or outraged public to finish what Marshal Grund has so well begun.

COURT NEWS

Monday's Daily.

Work at court began this morning with a jury. Only six of the regular panel showed up. So a pick up jury is doing the work. The men are: J. N. Myers, Martin Whitzel, Perry Romine, W. S. Purdy, Fred April, G. W. Rakestraw, Isaac E. Barker, A. P. Foltz, O. L. Wheaton, Samuel Kepler, Chas. Snell and Martin Kline. They are today, trying the case of B. & O. vs Schulthess.

Tuesday's Daily.

Yesterday, Monday, the two men from Waterloo, David John and Skip Barnhart, who had been arrested for burglary and larceny, were called into court. Both plead not guilty. Barnhart gave bond for his appearance at and both will be tried at an early date.

As noted yesterday, the trial of B. & O. vs Schulthess began and witnesses were being heard. Rose & Rose are attorneys for the B. & O., and Roby and Mountz are for Schulthess.

This is a replevin case to secure some horses sold to Mr. Schulthess by an officer of the B, & O. at Garrett.

Last February two cars, containing 39 horses were shipped from Chicago to parties at Tiffin, Ohio. They reached Garrett, but while in the yards there, there was a collision in which five horses were killed, and a number injured, It appears that someone came and offered $1 each for the dead horses which was accepted. The injured horses were taken to Cattell's livery barn to be cared for. Mr. Schulthess bought ten of them for about $100 and took them to his farm. Soon after, the B. & O. wanted them back, and claimed they had no right to sell them. It appears that R. C. Jones chief clerk of T. J. English who is superintendent of this division was the man who sold the horses. But Supt. English was on the stand yesterday, and said that Jones had no right to sell them and told him to go by Schulthess and have the horses returned. But it appears that Schulthess refused. The affidavit of C. B. Lewis Gen. freight agent at Baltimore, was reada, to show that Jones had no authority to sell the injured horses.

Cattell, who had the horses in charge for a time, thought they were not worth over $20 apiece then, and take the chances of their getting well.

This morning testimony began again the B. & O. horse case. The chief witness for Mr. Schulthess was himself He said that when he had found there were injured horses, he asked the station agent if they would be sold. He was referred to English the division superintendent. That afternoon, Jones who was chief clerk for English told Schulthess that orders had come from Baltimore to sell the injured horses. So Schulthess bought them for about $100.

This afternoon arguments were had, and then it went to the jury, who are now to tackle it. It may take them all night.

Wednesday's Daily.

This, Wednesday, morning the jury were ready. They had gone out at about five last evening and had not decided till two this morning. When court was called, the judge read their answers to the interrogations, between forty and fifty in all. The most important answers were those that said the general freight agent at Baltimore had given instructions to the division Superintendent at Garrett, Mr. English, to sell the injured horses, and that English told Jones, his clerk. to sell them. and that Jones sold them to Schulthess. This seemed a vital point. for it appears that without being specially instructed to do so, Jones held no authority to sell There was however one interrogatoary that was not fully answered, and another that relating to the value of the horses that Schulthess had bought, that was not answered at all. So the jury had to go out again and agree on full answers to those two.

After about half an hour the jury came back, having decided all the questions. This gave the verdict in favor of Schulthess. They decided that the ten horses sold to Schulthess were worth $360, but of course he does not have to pay only what he paid first.

An attorney from Indianapolis asked to nave a temporary injunction to restrain Attorney Wickwire as agent for Parr from selling some land in Steuben county, one of famous marl beds, as another party had a claim on the land. The order was granted, and the matter will be settled in court June 5.

Laura Ager was then granted a divorce from Hiram Ager, both of Butler She said he failed to provide. Her attorney was Ott Baxter, and on the other side Frank Brink.

At 1:30 came up the case begun at Angola in which the insurance company refuses to pay a death loss to the heirs of M. Gilbert. It is going on before the jury. Gilbert, Roby and Sol. Wood are for the Gilbert heirs, and F. M. Powers and W. H. Latta of Indianapolis for the insurance company.

BRYAN AT FORT WAYNE

The Distinguished Exponent of Democracy to be Heard There Saurday, May 27.

The announcement is made that the Hon. William Jennings Bryan will appear at Fort Wayne under the auspices of the Bi-metallic League of Allen County, on Saturday evening, May, 27, His forthcoming appearance, will no doubt be the occasion of a great demonstration, as no man occupies a higher place in the estimation of a large class of the American people than he. The people of Fort Wayne are sparing no effort to honor in a most signal and fitting manner the man whose matchless eloquence has won him the love of his own party and challenged the admiration of his opponets. The reception will be in keeping with Mr. Bryan's character as a man and as a leader. All the railroads centering in Fort Wayne will give special rates for the occasion and there will be a large attendance from all over Northern Indiana, Western Ohio and Southern Michigan.

Finding of Miss Taggart.

The sad death of Miss Florence Taggart, daughter of Mayor Taggart of Indianapolis, now has its last chapter. She was brought home last Wednesday and after a brief funeral service at the home, her body was consigned to the grave on Thursday. A brief recapitutation will interest the people of this county where she was born.

She and several friends were taking a trip in a naptha launch having gone out the mouth of the Mississippi river into the Gulf of Mexico, and gone eastward. It is supposed the naptha exploded tore the boat to pieces, for soon some wreckage was driven ashore. This was in January last. Nothing more has been known of them though friends and parents have searched faithfully. April 24, a fisherman landed at a low sandy island in a wild part of that always wild and marshy coast. The island is so flat that at high water the sea goes over it. Here he found a body, a log lying between it and the waves. The salt waves dashed over and onto the body and preserved it no doubt from decay. She was fully clothed, except shoes, and it is supposed she was wearing slippers at the time of the explosion. Some parts of her clothing had initials and some had the name the of maker. The fisherman buried her, leaving on her clothing and all her rings and jewelry, some of which were quite costly. He probably thought little of the matter, for those of his occupation find bodies washed up now and then. But he happened to speak of the matter in a village he visited. It got into the local papers, then into the city papers. Mayor Taggart and wife at once started for the lonely island and easily identified the body of their child. Of course it was some relief to find her and to know now, that she has a resting place other that the sea, but the whole episode has been one of the saddest ever recorded. Many people of Garrett where she was born will remember her as a little girl. The other members of the lost party have not been heard from.

Gold Deposits in the Philippines.

At this distance and with the slight exploratory work which has been carried on in the Philippine Islands, the minerals that can be profitably exported are best known. Mr. George F. Becker in his recent investigation has given a very clear view of the mineral exploration in the Philippines, and has shown that gold is found in a great number of localities in the archipelago, from northern Luzon to central Mindano. In most cases the gold is detrital, and is found either in existing water-courses or in deposits now deserted by the current, It is said that in Mindano that some of the gravels are in an elevated position and adapted to hydraulic mining. There are no data at hand which indicate decisively the value of any of the placers, but the fact that they are washed largely with cocoanut-shells for pans by the natives is an indication of either rich deposits or quite coarse gold. In the province of Abra, at the northern end of Luzon. there are placers, and the river Abra itself yields auriferous gravel. In Le Planto there are gold-quartz veins as well as gravels, and here also is the best-developed deposit of copper ores, although these are also reported from a great number of localities on the islands of Luzon, Mindoro, Capul, Mabate, Panay and Mindano. This last island is practically unexplored and full of possibilities.—Dr. David T. Day, in The Engineering Magazine for May.

CLUB NOTES

The meeting of the L. L. C. Saturday was especially delightful and profitable. It was at the home of Mrs. H. B. McCord, she and Mrs. Guild and Mrs. E. Zimmerman having united to entertain on that occasion. It was a day of special work the subject being, "Birds."

There was, as usual, a regular program, and the first paper read was "Among Our Birds," prepared by Mrs. M. B. Willis, and in her absence read by her daughter Mrs. Will Eckhart. It was full of interesting matter.

The next paper was "Couriers of the Air" by Mrs. J. E. Ross, which dealt largely with birds of the carrier kind and contained a vast amount of information about these winged messengers their nature and habits. The subject was all the more attractive as just now we are using carrier pigeons to send news from the armies in front in the Philippines back to Manila, enabling us to get quick news, such as would be impossible if we had to depend on the railroad and telegraph, both of which have been rendered of little use, by the insurgents.

"Homes not made with Hands" was the subject of a paper by Mrs. Will Keeran of Fort Wayne, who is an honorary member. Sickness in the family prevented her coming and her paper was read by Mrs. Geo. Schaab. It showed the construction of nests by different kinds of birds and gave many new ideas.

Then followed 3-minute talks by the members on that part of the program. They were by Mrs. Swineford and Mrs. Holmes. Mrs. Sprott having just arrived from the trip to Terre Haute as a delegate to the state meeting, was excused from her part of it. The other two gave short talks mostly relating to personal experiences with pets of various kinds all of which were very entertaining.

Then came quite a surprise, and a very acceptable one. The hostesses of the occasion had invited Mrs. Jane Hine of Sedan to read a paper about our native birds. She has for many years made our wild birds a study. With her it has been a labor of love, and so well has she learned all about her feathered friends that she is able to give imitations of many of their calls. And these were wonderfully real. There was also an abundant fund of information given as to building nests, rearing young etc. etc. At the close, all were allowed to ask such questions as they chose, which she answered most pleasantly.

Mrs. Ehlers an honorary member was present and made very acceptable remarks.

—Mrs. Lottie Cochran, another honorary member, who had arrived the evening before from Arizona, also spoke briefly, saying how thankful she was to be able to meet the members again.

Current news was then given, as usual, and were, as always of great interest. The ladies were then asked to remain for social hour, at the close of which was served a splendid lunch in five courses, all very delicate and enjoyable as all the Club's lunches are During this, Miss Bessie Zimmerman furnished sweet music on the piano, It should be remarked that the meetings of the club for the past year have been marked by more than the ordinary number of social features.

Among those from abroad were, Mrs. Josie Klotz Bigelow, of Van Wert, Ohio, Mrs Ira Coder Leigthy, of Mrs. Hines, of Sedan, Mrs. Cochran of Arizona, Mrs. M. E. Olds, of St. Joe, and Mrs. W. C. Hartman, of Roann. The club then adjourned to meet next Saturday with Mrs. Mabel Hodge.

An Iron Foundry a Sea

A foundry at sea had not been heard of before the cruise of the Vulcan. Whatever other kinds of naval repair work had been executed heretofore on board a ship, that of making large brass and iron castings had not been attempted. In her facilities for this new line of work the Vulcan stands preeminent and alone. That the unique equipment for foundry work was successful is more than shown by the fact that thousands of pounds of iron and brass castings were made and finished for the ships of the fleet. The brass furnaces were kept in almost constant service, sometimes running off two heats a day, and making it necessary to carry the work far into the night, much to to the discomfort of the men, who were trying to get some sleep and rest before another day's work. In iron casting not more than one heat was run off in a day and that usually about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. For after filling the molds and dropping bottom, it was practically impossible to do much more in that part of the ship till the next morning. Kipling has sung for the Scotch engineer and stoker, but there was no heaven-born genius on board the Vulcan to treasure up the memories and scenes incident to dropping bottom. The usual luxuries of such work ashore were entirely missing. Like the fiery furnace of old, the heat seemed seven times more intense than it was wont to be ashore.—Gardiner C. Sims and W. S. Aldrich, in the Engineering Magazine for June

OBITUARY

Died, Sunday morning May 21, 1899. at seven o'clock, at her residence on West Depot-st, Butler, Ind., after a lingering illness of many weeks, in the 27th year of her age, Mattie Campbell.

Martha Elizabeth Hamilton was born at Napoleon, Ohio, Dec. 21st 1872. When about seven years of age she removed with her parents William and Emma Hamilton to Massillon, Ohio, where her father, a telegraph operator in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co, died on the 9th of Nov. 1880. She then removed with her mother, brother and sister to Angola, Ind. March 26, 1898, she was united in marriage to Romaine C. Campbell and removed with him to Butler, Ind., where she has since resided. To this union was born one child, Vera, now in her 6th year, who with her husband, mother, brother and sister survive her.

NATION'S MONUMENT

TO ITS IMMORTAL DEAD AT ARLINGTON CEMETERY.

The Beautiful Spot Near Washington City in Which Thousands of Known and Unknown Heroes Await the Resurrection Trumpet's Call.

ARLINGTON may truly be called "the nation's monument to its immortal dead." It would be hard to conceive of a more beautiful place in which to rest after life's fitful fever than in this sacred spot. It is located on the Virginian hills about three miles southwest of Washington, on the old Georgetown and Alexandria pike, a road which a hundred years ago was the principal means of communication for all of that part of the country. It rises beyond the river in terraced hills, while every foot of ground for miles around it was the scene of the great drama of the civil war.

The story of Arlington itself is full of historic interest. It was the property of George Washington's adopted son, George Washington Parke Custis, and he built the old mansion in 1802. Into this house he brought his bride, Mary Lee Fitzhugh, and here he spent the remainder of his life, as a quiet country gentleman without ever giving any evidence of possessing much of the spirit of his honored grandsire. He left but one living child, Mary Randolph Custis, who married Robert E. Lee in 1831, and they lived at Arlington until the outbreak of the war, at which time they left it never to return. During the war it was used as headquarters for the commanders of the Union troops that were quartered on the grounds. Washington was the hospital base of all the surrounding country, and thousands of wounded soldiers were carried there to die. The cemetery of the Soldiers' Home became overcrowded, and what to do with the soldier dead became a very serious question. Then it was that Quartermaster General Megis ordered that Arlington should be used as a burying ground for the Union soldiers.

It is interesting in this connection to note that the first soldier buried at Arlington was a rebel prisoner of war. In 1867 it was declared a national cemetery, and, a number of years afterwards, the Government paid to the Lee family the price they agreed upon for it. The estate contains about 1,100 acres and the 200 acres surrounding the mansion is used for burial purposes, while all of the rest is a magnificent park. The house is modeled after the temple Theseus at Athens, and consists of a center 60 feet long; two wings, and a portico in the front, 25 feet wide, with six massive dorie columns, which are 60 feet high. The view from this porch is surpassingly beautiful. To the north lie Fort Meyer and Georgetown. Extending away to the east across the Potomac lies the proud city of the nation—Washington—with its legislative hall of granite and marble, while just beyond it glitters the gilded dome of the Congressional Library building. The mansion is surrounded by a broad driveway, and from it the well-kept walks lead in and out among the flower beds.

TOMB OF UNKNOWN DEAD.

In a perfect grove of forest and ornamental trees, over a level plateau that extends from the western wall of the cemetery to the mansion, is the general burying ground where thousands of the private soldiers lie. In this section the headstones are all alike, simple marble slabs rising about two feet from the ground, bearing the names and regiments of those whose graves they mark. Directly south of the house is a most interesting plot of ground. Right in its center is what is known as the Temple of Fame. It is a circular structure and is composed of eight columns, surmounted by a dome, which rests on an octagonal cornice of stonework. Set in this cornice are the names of Washington, Lincoln, Grant and Farragut. There is also carved on each of the pillars one of the following illustrious names: McPherson, Sedgwick, Reynolds, Humphrey, Garfield, Mansfield, Thomas and Meade. This temple is seen in the background of the illustration of the Tomb of the Unknown. During the summer months the names of our famous generals appear in floral letters in this plot. Immediately west of the Temple is the Tomb of the Unknown Dead, and contains the bodies of 2,111 soldiers who were picked up after the battle of Bull Run, and who could not be identified. It is one of the most touching sights.

There are four magnificent entrance gates to Arlington, of which, perhaps, the one known as the Sheridan is the most interesting. It is of four mammoth white marble columns, which were originally in the War Department at

THE ARLINGTON MANSION.

Washington, but when it was destroyed by fire in 1879, they were saved, and were placed at Arlington as a gateway, and named in honor of "Little Phil." All the driveways converge to the house, and on the eastern slope of the hill in front of the mansion lie some of the most distinguished officers of the war. The officers' section also runs west of the house to the wall on the west, and in the entire cemetery more than 15,000 soldiers lie waiting the call of the resurrection morning.

Significance of the Day.

There is a melancholy pleasure in considering this great anniversary, second only in importance to Fourth of July, but overshadowed by a vastly different sentiment. Independence Day is the birthday of American freedom. Memorial Day may well be called its day of baptism and consecration. On this occasion we turn from the everyday concerns of life and give ourselves up to the contemplation of acts of heroism that raise humanity above the common level and link it more closely to the Divine Spirit. These heroes whose graves we strew with flowers gave their lives for their country; sacrificed themselves and all that they possessed that liberty and peace as established by the Constitution of the United States might be freed from the bands that had been thrown around them, and might flourish untrammeled, unconditioned and without reproach.

ARE HEROES ALL!

ALONG with the tears shed over the graves of those fallen there is mingled pride in the patriotic deeds and heroic achievements of both the dead and the living. Within the past year Liberty has spoken a new fiat. The note of the bugle and roar of the cannon have been heard, and tyrannical snackles have been stricken from a people long enslaved. To accomplish this American soldiers volunteered, and from shot, disease and weariness many died. Some of them sleep in Arlington and some in the family lot in the little church yard, but there are others who lie buried on barren Cuban hillsides, and still others in the tropical jungles of the Philippines or in the depths of the sea.

No matter what differences of opinion may exist as to the war policy of the Government, seventy-five millions of people are a unit in doing honor to the nation's dead, wherever they lie, and in praising the courage and bravery of American soldiers, whether they marched with Sherman or with Lee, stormed the blockhouses at El Caney, worked the guns for Dewey or swam the alligator-infested rivers of Luzon. Sons of the veterans who faced each other on the terrible battlefields of the South have within a twelvemonth fought and fallen side by side. Their blood has effectually wiped out the last vestige of sectional lines, and the stars and stripes now have the same meaning the country over.

This year we crown Shiloh anew. We commemorate Chickamauga and Corinth, Antietam and Appomatox—all the historic spots where heroes fell and which sacred grief immortalizes. But there are now new graves—graves across two oceans to be decorated. The aged widow of the soldier whose tomb has been a mecca for devotion these thirty odd years, in this month of budding flowers and glorious greenery, shares tears and love with those of a later generation, who have reason to remember Santiago and San Juan, Manila and Malolos with sorrow.

America reverently honors the memory of her dead and eulogizes the patriotic heriosm of her living. Their deeds will never be forgotten by a grateful nation. Heroes all—the dead and the living; the mingled emotions of sorrow and pride that sway the great popular heart, like the brooding protecting wings of a cherishing presence, hover alike over the peaceful village cemetery and the grave in the island jungle. Garlands wither and flowers lose their fragrance, but the glory of the nation's heroes shall bloom on forever.

"OLD ABE."

Live War Eagle Which Accompanied the Eighth Wisconsin Regiment.

"Old Abe" was the live war eagle which accompanied the Eighth Wisconsin regiment during the war of the rebellion. Old Abe was a fine specimen of the bald eagle. Various stories are told of his capture, but the most trustworthy account is that Chief Sky, a Chippewa Indian, took him from the nest while an eaglet. The nest was found on a pine tree in the Chippewa country, about three miles from the mouth of the Flambeau, near some rapids in the river. He and another Indian cut the tree down, and, amid the menaces of the parent birds, secured two young eagles about the size of prairie hens. One of them died. The other, which lived to become historical, was sold to Daniel McCann for a bushel of corn. McCann carried it to Eau Claire, and presented it to a company then being organized as a part of the Eighth Wisconsin infantry.

"OLD ABE."

Old Abe was called by the soldiers the "new recruit from Chippewa," and sworn into the service of the United States by encircling his neck with red, white and blue ribbons, and by placing on his breast a rosette of colors, after which he was carried by the regiment into every engagement in which it participated, perched upon a shield in the shape of a heart. A few inches above the shield was a grooved crosspiece for the eagle to rest upon, on either end of which were three arrows. When in line Old Abe was always carried on the left of the color bearer, in the van of the regiment. The color bearer wore a belt to which was attached a socket for the end of the staff, which was about five feet in length. Thus the eagle was high above the bearer's head, in plain sight of the column. A ring of leather was fastened to one of the eagle's legs, to which was connected a strong hemp cord about twenty feet long.

Old Abe was the hero of about twenty-five battles, and as many skirmishes. Remarkable as it may appear, not one bearer of the flag, or of eagle, always shining marks for the enemy's rifles, was ever shot down. Once or twice Old Abe suffered the loss of a few feathers, but he was never wounded. The great bird enjoyed the excitement of carnage. In battle he flapped his wings, his eyes blazed, and with piercing screams, which arose above the noise of the conflict, seemed to urge the company on to deeds of valor. Old Abe knew his own regiment from every other, would always accompany its cheer, and never that of any other regiment. "I'd rather capture 'Old Abe,'" said Gen. Sterling Price of the Confederate army, "than a whole brigade."

Having served three years, a portion of the members of Company C were mustered out, and Old Abe was presented to the State of Wisconsin. For many years on occasions of public exercises or review, like other illustrious veterans, he excited in parade universal and enthusiastic attention. He occupied pleasant quarters in the State capitol at Madison, Wis., until his death at an advanced age.

If a man is worth knowing at all he is worth knowing well.—Alexander Smith.

PANOPLIES of leaf and bough
Wreaths of greenery, vine and spray,
Bring their glowing splendor now
In garlands for Memorial Day.

Blossoming beauty stars the grass
In forms of grace, with varied hue.
Even the fleecy clouds that pass
Springtime's wondrous charms review.

Troops of swallows speck the air
What can be more blithe than they?
Hurtling here and darting there,
The light-winged cavalry of May.

Blandly, too, the zephyr's breath
Stirs with tender touch the flowers,
To say that rising life, not death,
Is master of these golden hours.

For who can deem our heroes dead
When May's fair blossoms crown their sleep
And every grave is garlanded?
On fame's bright scroll their names we keep.

Somewhere in climes of fairer hue
Than comes to any earthly May,
To honor and to duty true,
Life must have come to them. And they

No more in conflict or in toil
Need mingle in stern battle's roar,
In realms where nothing shall assail,
And life is theirs forevermore.

Though dumb to-day the cannon's mouth,
While beauty springs from bud and spray,
And all the winds are soft and south,
Let reverence crown Memorial Day.
—Joel Benton.

First Memorial Service.

The first memorial service was held over the graves of the Union prisoners who died at the stockade at Charleston, S. C., May 30, 1865.

Absence makes the heart grow fonder.—J. H. Bailey.

ONE DECORATION DAY.

How Its Observance Brought About the Relief of a Needy Soldier.

It was May 30. All good people had been warned to turn out and decorate the graves of the dead brave in our cemetery. It was in the early days after the war, and every one was ready to do his part. The speaker of the day, the town officials, the village fathers were in carriages; the pretty young girls dressed in white represented the different States and carried flowers in their hands as they rode in the big, old omnibus in the procession. Lumbering after these came a dray carrying an easy chair in which a sick soldier was half reclining. He had been seen day after day sitting at a window by a generous hearted woman. She had entered and asked him about himself; she had noted the poverty in the room, the decrepit old father and mother, and she had thought this was good missionary work. She went out among her neighbors, begging food, bedding, everything for the family. He told her his story; how he had enlisted, started for the front, had fallen ill, suffered for want of care in the barracks and had finally come home disheartened and crippled for life. Poverty, extreme poverty, had come to the family. A brother who had a family of his own was the only support of them all. They were actually suffering for food.

So Decoration day came on and the good friend caused the soldier to be taken to the cemetery, where the address of the day took its chief point from the afflicted man, where a collection was taken up for him and a new start given him in life. A little stock of pins and needles and the like was furnished him, a string was fastened to the old-fashioned latch of the outer door, so that he could open it without trouble, and, as he lay upon his couch, he sold trifles to his neighbors and friends. The pension surgeon took his case in hand, the lawyers pleaded his cause and after a delay of several years a pension was granted him and a few years farther on back pay was allowed him. Relief from care and anxiety has contributed toward his amendment in health and he is now much better. All this is the fruit of one Decoration day's work started by a generous, impulsive woman.—Exchange.

MAY 30 is Memorial day—a day devoted to memories of one of the greatest struggles in history and to ceremonies in honor of those who fought in defense of the Union. All the people of the war period made great sacrifices and carried burdens of sorrow and trouble, but, by common consent, those who served in the army were given first place in the hearts of the people. It seems almost beyond belief, says a recent writer, that for four years the nation was like an armed camp and that the largest and most perfectly equipped armies of modern times fought for and against a principle through four years of fierce war. It seems almost as unreal as a picture from some old romance that, after scores and hundreds of battles, the great contest ended with the historic scene at Appomattox, in the triumph of the cause of the Union, and that at a wave of the hand of him who said: "Let us have peace," two great armies dissolved into compact bodies of citizens pledged to the same principle of government. There were defeats for both sides during the war. This is not a day to recall these. There were as many victories for either side, as many battles that hung in the balance. This is not a day to enlarge upon those. The struggle ended in a more perfect union, in a reunited people, in a stronger, greater nationality, and this makes precious every memory of the fiery ordeal through which the nation passed and out of which it came with a hastened spirit, but with higher ideals.

When Memorial day was instituted, there were those who feared it would become one of bitter memories, and that its observance would rekindle the fires of sectional hate. The fears were groundless. No resentment or bitterness is associated with the day. Those who won and those who failed in the war are agreed as to the sum total of achievement represented in the country as it stands to-day under one flag. They are agreed as to the courage and endurance of those who fought and join in the aspirations of an exultant American citizenship.

This is the spirit of Memorial day. Those who meet, or join in ceremonials, to honor the memories of those who fell or those who fought in the battles for the Union pay a tribute well deserved. In reverting to the memories of the war, they strengthen the bonds of union and take new lessons in patriotism. It is a day of proud and tender memories, not of resentment and bitterness.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

IMPERIAL TYRANNY.

One short year ago President McKinley proclaimed to the civilized world that this country would stand on the proposition that "extension of territory through conquest is criminal aggression." Since the fall of Manila this announcement of our policy has not been retracted. In practice the policy of the administration has been such as to give rise to the general opinion that there is contemplated the carrying out of measures that constitute what President McKinley clearly and truly defined "criminal aggression."

Monster mass meetings have been held for the purpose of protesting against such a policy and demanding that the President respect the promises made by himself on behalf of this nation. These meetings have had the cordial support of men of national—yes, international—reputation for learning and teachers and counselors in the intellectual and moral world. They came from divers sects and political parties, guided solely by their sense of righteousness, liberty and patriotism. Largely attended counter demonstrations have been held, and the demand there made that President McKinley shall continue to ignore the solemn pledges by him made, and urging him to relentlessly wage a war of "criminal aggression."

The supporters of these meetings find their enthusiasm fed by the sordid cry of "Commerce follows the flag." Impartial onlookers assert that the attendants at these meetings are largely of the kind who follow the flag at a safe distance.

Our form of government, our traditions, our widespread innate love of liberty, our oft-expressed belief in the inherent rights of man are all opposed to "imperialism." When President McKinley publicly disavowed for this nation any intention of pursuing an "imperial" policy it was supposed by all patriotic Americans that such disavowal was solely for the enlightenment of foreign nations. It is humiliating to every right-minded American to find that a faint suggestion of possible commercial benefits has secured a following for imperialism, and that these followers are willing to see the standard of imperialism planted on the ruins of American honor.

The hypocritical cant which frames excuses for "criminal aggression" deceives no one. The general issue cannot be evaded. It is clear-cut and well defined. If President McKinley means anything less than imperialism it is quite easy for him to make his meaning known. He may rest assured that a distinct avowal of a just policy, followed by such active measures as would evince his sincerity of purpose, would at once silence adverse criticism and attract enthusiastic support. He may rest equally well assured that day by day and step by step the noblest men and purest patriots of this country will resolutely oppose the tendency toward imperial tyranny.—Chicago Democrat.

British Gold.

In every Presidential election up to that of 1896 Republican platforms, newspaper organs and stump shouters charged that the opposition was backed up by British gold. To-day the term "British gold" is never seen in the columns of any Republican organ, and a sub-editor who should be so foolish or unforuhate as to insert in a Republican paper an editorial similar to those that were in fashion in 1892 would lose his job instantly. Everybody now knows that British gold (which is the property of British usurpers, the common people of that country never seeing any yellow money) is to-day a firm supporter of the Republican party.

Can any Republican deny it? Can anybody name any British banker, financier or moneyed man who would rejoice to see William J. Bryan elected? On the contrary, are not the hoarders of British gold interested, pecuniarily, in the continuance of "the existing gold standard," and would they not, therefore, be willing to contribute to a fund designed to pay the cost of defeating the free silver party in America? British gold will unquestionably be spent for the Republican ticket next year. And if we allow our elections to be thus bought we shall be selling ourselves into slavery to Lombard street.

How many American citizens are ready to stand up and avow that they vote the ticket dictated and supported by British gold?

Pleading for Imperial Clemency.

Heinous as is the offense of Edward Atkinson, of Boston, in flinging his gray goose quill fernist the imperial designs of the administration—circulars containing his anti-slaughter sentiments having been mailed, it is alleged, to the volunteers in the Philippines—it is to be hoped, in view of the unhappy miscreant's useful and honorable career, he will not be shot at the next rising of the sun. Be merciful with Edward, Mr. President, and maybe you'll convert him into an imperial whooper with your gracious clemency.—Detroit Free Press.

Long and Expensive Job.

It required thirty-five years of constant summer and winter campaigning to "pacify" tribes numbering 300,000 and capable of putting, at the most, 10,000 armed braves into the field. If it was a job of a third of a century to overcome our mere squad of nomadic Indians, how long will we be subduing to our will the Tagalos, Visayans and other tribes, numbering 8,000,000? We submit the problem to the expansionists and ask for an answer.

Nobody to Blame.

Like the venerable Cincinnati journalist who was in the habit of placing the responsibility of any of his shortcomings upon the shoulders of his "wicked partners," General Alger, it seems, is to claim immunity from criticism on the ground that he was, after all, the subordinate of Major McKinley. And in like manner the Major, according to his friends, must be exonerated because Alger's derelictions could not have been foreseen or guarded against. So that in point of fact nobody at all is to blame for the maladministration of the War Department. The Hon. Hazen S. Pingree, for instance, who is a bosom friend of Gen. Alger, demands to know why the Secretary of War should be blamed for McKinley's bad administration, and Mr. Grosvenor asks whether the President could have attended to the details of the War Department personally. It is only fair to say, however, that these recriminations come not from Messrs. Alger and McKinley, but from the partisans of those statesmen. Between the Major and his Secretary of War there subsists a deep affection, founded along in 1894, which will continue so long as Alger is in a position to aid in extricating great men from temporary financial embarrassment.—Chicago Chronicle.

The Humorous Griggs.

It is the opinion of lawyers of standing that Edward Atkinson of Boston has most excellent grounds for action for slander against McKinley's Attorney General. Griggs has gone out of his way to hold a reputable citizen up to public contempt as a "traitor." The offender cannot plead official privilege, because the offensive terms were applied in newspaper interviews under conditions which would warrant legal action and were applied to a man who was eminent long years before Griggs was dragged from New Jersey to ornament the President's Cabinet.

Should Atkinson see fit to prosecute Griggs, the Jersey imperialist would find himself on the horns of a dilemma. If he should plead justification and endeavor to prove Atkinson a "traitor," the country will want to know by what right he allowed the "traitor" to go unprosecuted. It is the duty of Griggs to punish treason and sedition. That is one of the things he is in office for. Why, then, does he not prosecute Atkinson, whom he has publicly branded as a traitor? The answer is very simple. He dare not because the country has received the suggestion of his so doing with a loud guffaw.—New York News.

Commerce and Imperialism.

All this talk to the effect that the possession of the Philippines will "introduce us to the Orient" is pure rubbish. No imperialist has yet undertaken to tell us how the possession of those islands will enable us to sell a dollar's worth more to "the Orient" than we could sell without them. Even Mr. Frye is constrained to admit that we need nothing more than coaling and naval stations for the purpose of protecting our commerce. We can sell to the people of "the Orient" if we offer them the things they want on terms as satisfactory to them as they can make with other venders; otherwise we cannot. It is not a matter of owning territory or making a great display of military or naval force. It is simply a matter of supplying things wanted on satisfactory terms. We have abundant proof of this in the fact that Europe takes more than three-fourths of all we sell, although we do not own an acre of ground in Europe or "fronting" Europe.—Chicago Chronicle.

Impudence of the Lumber Lords.

Late advices from Washington indicate that the lumber lords are entreating the administration to retaliatory action by exercising the option conferred in the Dingley act and doubling the tariff on lumber. This is positively the most impudent protectionist proposal which has ever been seriously urged. Not content with doing all in their power to frustrate the effort of the joint high commission to settle all matters in controversy between the United States and Canada, these voracious monopolists now seek to add to the difficulties of the situation and to foment new causes of disagreement when every consideration of the public welfare demands an amicable adjustment.—Philadelphia Record.

Poorest Way to Get a Market.

The customs receipts at Havana during April amounted to $860,000; and for the fiscal year they will close to $10,000,000. This reflects a very promising activity in trade thereabouts. It would be interesting to contrast these figures with the Manila customs collections. Facts as to the latter are wanting, but the internal revenue collections at Manila since the American occupation began amount to hardly $175,000. The utter demoralization of trade and industry there is strikingly shown by such figures. Our war of subjugation to get a market is destroying whatever market there was for us.—Springfield Republican.

Eagan's Punishment.

The punishment inflicted by the court martial on Brigadier General John P. Eagan for his obscene attack against General Miles was considered exceedingly mild by the people of this country, but it has entailed consequences which will be a severe lesson to the impudent and indiscreet officer. Membership in the Loyal Legion is highly prized by the officers who gained honor during the war between the States, and to have one's name dropped from the rolls of the legion is considered a deep disgrace. Such a punishment has fallen upon Eagan.—Exchange.

Imperial Brawls to Be Avoided.

It will be an evil day for the republic when we come to regard ourselves as so much of a "world power" that we are ready to join the brawls and wars of the old world nations. England is quite ready to see us become just that sort of a "power," available for use in the extraction of her embroiled chestnuts. We must beware lest Uncle Sam lose that sagacity which has been regarded as his distinguishing characteristic.—Springfield, Mass., Republican.

Letting Alger Down Easy.

Secretary Alger has at last admitted the truth of the report that he is an active candidate for United States Senatorial honors to succeed Senator McMillan, who declines renomination. We are not in the Major's confidence, but it seems as if a sufficient explanation for the chief executive's noticeable elation of spirits has been furnished. In looking about for a soft cushion on which to fall the War Secretary has selected one of billowy luxuriance and the only remaining problem to be solved is the pliability of the Michigan Legislature to be elected a year hence.—Chicago Chronicle.

"Censoring" the Mails.

The Atkinson incident is only one of the many incongruities arising out of the anomalous position of the United States in the Philippines. The Government, in this case, finds that it cannot admit copies of its own documents into the country which it has subdued. It is a matter of regret that the Government should be forced to such measures to sustain the President's policy, and it is apparent that some of President McKinley's earlier utterances regarding "criminal aggression" would be excluded from the Manila mail under this order of the Postmaster General.—Boston Post.

If We Are Lying.

The lawyers are forcing a very nice question to the front in Cuba. American lawyers insist that they have the right to practice there because the island is a part of the United States. The Cuban lawyers insist that they have not unless they are admitted to the bar under Cuban rules. If we are merely standing guard over Cuba until she is "pacified" it is evident that Cuba is not a part of the United States. But if we are lying, and mean to hang on to Cuba and use our troops to secure a vote for annexation, which is quite probable, the lawyers might as well go to practicing.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

All on Account of Jones.

This is the problem by the side of which all others confronting the Buckeye Republicans pale into insignificance. To Jones, or not to Jones; As compared with Jones, Sherman's return to Ohio politics is of no importance; the Hanna-Bushnell-Foraker feuds are mere sideshows; even Coxie Old Boy, the Cincinnati boss, and the turned-down McKisson, of Cleveland, are mere ciphers. There are all sorts of trouble at hand for the Ohio Republicans, and all on account of Jones.—Atlanta Constituiton.

Why Hanna Favors Quay.

"Of course I am for Quay. Why shouldn't I be?" remarked Senator Hanna to an interviewer. Hanna's point is well taken. In the nature of things birds of a feather will flock together. Quay, as chairman of the National Republican Committee, raised a tremendous corruption fund and elected a President. Hanna, occupying a similar position, squeezed millions from the trusts, debauched the voters in a dozen States and put McKinley in the White House.—New York Journal.

Democrats Do Their Own Thinking.

Republican organs have great sport pointing to the diversity of opinion in Democratic circles, forgetful of the fact that diversity of opinion among Democrats is an indication that Democrats do their own thinking. There would be no diversity of opinion among Democrats if Democrats followed the example of Republicans by allowing one or two leaders to do all their thinking for them.—Omaha World-Herald.

Administration Talk of Treason.

The weakness of the administration is made very clear by the silly Cabinet talk of "treason." With the best minds in the Republican party enlisted against "criminal aggression" disguised as "benevolent assimiliation," this Cabinet jabber is highly absurd. The most active "traitors" are distinguished members of the President's own party.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Danger in Upsetting a Precedent.

We much doubt whether Mr. Quay will succeed in overthrowing the precedent long established by the Senate. It is a dangerous matter for the Republican party to drift from well-established principles, no matter who the person is in whose behalf the matter is urged. In years to come these things return to plague the inventors.—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Merely a Move for Effect.

If there were really any expectation that Mr. Quay would get a seat in the Senate, contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States and of all precedent, there would have been no such haste to make the appointment. The appointment was not made with any such expectation, however. It is only intended for political effect.—Philadelphia Press.

The Two Republican Factions.

There are two elements in the Republican party, just as there are in the country at large. One represents Hanna, Alger, Eagan, Carter and carrion meat and the other represents the partisans who are for expansion, the honor of the flag and the punishment of the poisoners of soldiers. The latter class is rather out of place in the Republican party, but it exists.—Washington Times.

And There Are More Coming.

When the prediction was made that nothing short of an earthquake would prevent McKinley's re-election next year, it was not thought there would be such a prompt response. Indiana and Kentucky had earthquakes the very next day.—Butte Miner.

Should Miles Be Removed?

If Miles should be removed from the command of the army for performing his duty by the soldiers and by the nation, there is a possibility that the people will make other removals at their earliest convenience.—Cedar Rapids Gazette.

The Trouble of Two Loads.

Senator Hanna is not pleased with the political situation in Ohio. He is having some trouble in his efforts to find a candidate who can carry the load of Mark and Mack.—Louisville Dispatch.

He Is Getting Used to It.

Funny that President McKinley should consider it necessary to go to Hot Springs, Virginia, after being in hot water so long at Washington.—Manchester Union.

Understand One Another.

The trusts will not care so long as the g. o. p. confines itself to platform denunciation of trusts.—Omaha World-Herald.

RAG-TIME ON THE WANE.

Its Day Is About Past, and It Must Make Room for Something Else.

"Rag-time music," said the man who stands behind the counter in a Wabash avenue shop and ladies out harmony by the cord all day long, "rag-time music is about played out. It has had its day. Last fall and winter and the fall and winter before that our very best people were telling each other to take their clothes and go or announcing that they didn't like no cheap men. The formula for writing this sort of stuff is: Two bars of overcoat music and four barber-shop chords. You never heard of 'overcoat music?' Well, you will find often in theatrical journals an advertisement which reads: 'Wanted—One heavy. Must be able to double with brass.' That means that he must be able to mouth the lines of the tremendous villain and take his part with a tuba in the street parades.

"These fellows travel about the country in the winter time, they all wear overcoats on their parades, and the music is jammed into the right-side pocket. It is of the simplest kind, of course. You may depend upon it that next winter a different class of songs will catch the public. Sentimentals are about due to come to the front. We have not had a 'Sweet Marie' season in some years. These things work in cycles. One winter it is love and two winters it is comics, or 'nigger singing.' Of course, anything that's got 'mother' in it goes all of the time. The first fellow who comes along with a moan about moonlight and dear eyes and tender tones and a bruised heart is going to stack up like a pile of blues a mile high. Stuff concerning possums and razzers and he sut'nly was good to me isn't wanted."—Chicago Chronicle.

Consumption Among Soldiers.

According to recent government statistics, the French army is in a highly unfavorable condition from a hygienic standpoint. The general mortality of the army increases year by year. In 1895 it was 6.85 per 1,000 soldiers. Since the epidemic in 1889 each year the army goes through a similar epidemic. A large number of the soldiers die from lung troubles, the rate steadily rising. This condition is attributed to the unsanitary condition of the barracks, the habit of drinking absinthe and the smoking of cigarettes, all of which have a tendency to produce consumption, although the soldiers live in the open air and have plenty of exercise.—Philadelphia Record.

Among the European countries, Germany and England hold the lead, with 140,000 and 116,000 instruments, respectively. In France there are scarcely more than 35,000; while there are 62,000 in Sweden, 35,000 in Scotland and 30,000 in Switzerland. There are 700,000 in use in the United States.

MR. W. H. B. WILLIAMS, COLUMBUS, OHIO.

W. H. B. Williams, publisher of The Farmers' Industrial Union, in a recent letter to Dr. Hartman says: "I have used Pe-ru-na as a family medicine for several years. I find it of especial use for myself. I have had several tedious spells with systemic catarrh and before using Pe-ru-na I had tried several other remedies with little or no success. But in Pe-ru-na I found a prompt and sure cure. I always keep the remedy which promptly relieves any attack of the same malady.

"My wife also uses Pe-ru-na. She finds it of especial use for severe spells, to which she is subject. We always keep it in the house as a family medicine. We think it an excellent remedy for the various ills to which children are subject, especially climatic diseases." Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, for a free book on family medicine.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Two Chesterton Business Men Missing—Students Warned Off by a Determined Instructor—Gold Near Logansport—Anderson Man's Invention.

A. P. Anderson, a well-to-do business man of Chesterton, has suddenly disappeared, and despite diligent search made by officers and his family no trace of him can be found. Anderson left home for Chicago on a business trip and that is the last seen of him. Just three weeks previous P. F. Frederickson of the same place left home and is still missing. Both men had considerable money and valuables on their persons when they left home, and it is thought they were both victims of foul play.

They Failed to Duck Him.

Twenty students of Rose Polytechnic Institute at Terre Haute called on Prof. Kimmell, physical instructor of the Indiana State Normal, for the purpose of taking him from his room and "ducking" him, because they held him responsible for an offensive handbill which was thrown about the city. The Professor told the young men he had a revolver which he would use in protecting himself against any assault they should attempt on him.

David L. Bush, who returned from the Klondike about a year ago, has found gold within a mile of Logansport. He claims the vein runs through the ground in the vicinity of the old canal bed and brought in a portion of the dirt, which was fused and refined and pronounced the genuine article. Bush says there is plenty more where that came from and there is much excitement pending developments.

New Power for War Vessels.

Upon appointment with Secrtary Long of the navy Judge D. C. Chipman, of Anderson, has gone to Washington to submit to the Navy Department a plan covering new motor power for war vessels. For the new process it is claimed that enough fuel can be carried on board to carry a vessel around the world or last one year; that 10 per cent. more heat can be generated than under present conditions and that there is absolutely no smoke.

Will Build New Electric Line.

TO SKAGUAY IN A CATBOAT.

Daring Voyage Proposed by Miss Carrie Hope of Seattle, Wash.

It would be a daring man indeed who would essay to sail from Seattle to Skaguay, Alaska, in an open catboat. In fact, it would be an extremely difficult matter to find one, no matter how experienced a sailor, to undertake so hazardous a journey. But, lacking a man, Seattle has a young girl who declares she will do just this thing. Miss Carrie Hope, a miss recently out of her teens, pretty, determined, perverse and an accomplished sailor, has her plans nearly completed.

MISS HOPE.

Miss Hope has her vessel all ready, and says she will cruise up the inhospitable western coast to Skaguay in search of fame and fortune. She is aware of the dangers of her undertaking, but this does not influence her to abandon it. If she fails to acquire fortune—is not lost on the way—she will certainly gain fame by her exploit. It is no light thing to sail up the western coast in a good, stout steamer. This thing of taking a mere catboat with one small three-cornered sail and trusting to the sea not to swallow vessel and cargo is to take a long chance. So if the girl wins she will have fame and a fine story to relate.

Miss Hope is an accomplished sailor, for she was born on Long Island and has much practical experience in nautical matters. Still it has been represented to her that this does not lessen the dangers of a voyage up a coast notorious for its savage storms and broken lines. Sailing placid lakes and even the sound is something widely removed from cruising on the Pacific along the worst shore line in the world. Miss Hope pleases to cast aside all feminine traditions as to the propriety of becoming a mariner in furry attire. She is tired of staying on land and waiting for the tide to turn and bring good luck her way. So she will go to the tide and travel with it—or against it, as the case may be.

Whatever may be said of this Seattle girl's project, she cannot be criticised for lack of courage. If she be successful she will probably have enough money to spend in frills and furbelows to atone for the discomfort of living day and night inside of bunchy garments made of fur. If she be unsuccessful—well, she won't need so much as a shroud, for the sea will care for its own.

SLEEPING BAG LIKE A HOUSE.

Portable Shelter that Shields Hunters from Storms and Cold.

Hunters, prospectors, and persons compelled to move from day to day have found the sleeping bag the most convenient form of bed and these are now in general use among this class of people. They are extremely comfortable and at the same time offer absolute protection from the elements, as they are generally lined with some soft material and have an outer covering of leather or rubber to keep out the wet. Their form is generally well known, but what seems to be a great improvement in these has been recently patented in this country by Aberlard Lapierre of Montreal. His invention consists of a rigid frame, collapsible when not in use, and covered with some material adapted to withstand the weather. The whole top is removable on a hinge to admit of entrance, while at the upper end of this lid is a smaller opening, also covered with a similar hinged lid. This latter may be closed entirely in cold weather, while in milder temperatures it may be fastened at any desired point. When the top is closed a means of ventilation is provided through holes under the protecting edge of the larger flap.

A Russian wooing culminates in the betrothal feast, at which the bride-elect cuts off a long tress of hair and gives it to her betrothed, who in turn presents her with bread and salt, an almond cake, and a silver ring set with a turquoise.

German Tit-Bits.

The Germans have some strange articles of food. They are very fond of raw herrings, and regard raw ham and raw smoked beef as great delicacies. Some of their soups are odd, too. Beer soup, wine soup, milk soup, buttermilk soup, and even quince soup are consumed with great relish by the honest Teuton. Some of these soups are, indeed, very good; others are more curious than pleasant. A favorite dish of theirs is veal in stewed prunes. Their "blackbread" is something like our whole-meal bread; but it is much browner, and has a peculiar acid taste which is all its own, and to which a Briton's taste is not easily reconciled. But what would the afternoon callers of a lady in these countries think, if she were to give them a little rum or brandy with their tea? Yet this is what German ladies do, and they have a good excuse for doing so. Tea, as made in Germany, is so wretchedly weak—resembling the "sky-blue" familiar to schoolboys—that it needs strengthening.

The Power of Storm.

The Cayman Islands were nearly overwhelmed by the recent storm. Apparently secure things are not safe. Even if you have health be on your guard. Disease works stealthily. An occasional dose of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will keep the bowels regular and disease at bay. If you have indigestion and constipation try it.

Bottle-Making Machinery.

M. Leon Appert, a French inventor, was the first to introduce the use of compressed air for blowing bottles, thereby affording a means of replacing the usual method of blowing them by the mouth. This practice has a very injurious effect on the lungs of the glassblowers, and the great heat to which they are necessarily subjected intensifies the evil. The use of mechanically driven air is now combined with other contrivances. The quantity of fused glass necessary to form a bottle is poured into an iron mould, and is distributed by a rotating piece over the sides, the formation of the bottle being assisted by a current of compressed air. After withdrawal from the mould the bottle only requires annealing to be ready for use. Machines have been constructed which can turn out twenty bottles a minute, and there is no doubt that a higher speed than this will be reached in the future.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Around the World in a Day.

This globe of ours is a pretty good-sized sphere, but we are told the Deering Harvester Company of Chicago can produce in a single day enough Binder Twine to encircle it, with 3,500 miles to spare—30,000 miles of twine is a fair day's output! A reliable publication recently proved by correspondence with dealers in all parts of America that 36 per cent. of the twine used in 1898 was Deering Twine.

Backache

Wearying, ceaseless backache.

Dull, exhausting and constant pain.

No comfort by day. No rest at night.

Aches in the small of the back, pain low down in the side. No spirit for any task, no hope for relief. Great numbers of women are not free from backache from one year's end to another.

Among Mrs. Pinkham's victories there is none more complete than that over backache, and the evidence of thousands of women prove that she is its conqueror.

Mrs. C. Klenk, of Wells, Minn. (Box 151), writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I suffered for years with a long list of troubles, and I want to thank you for my complete recovery. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a wonderful medicine for women.

"I had severe female complaints, causing terrible backache and nervous prostration; was dizzy most of the time, had headache and such a tired feeling. I now have taken seven bottles of your Compound and have also used the Sanative Wash and feel like a new woman. I must say I never had anything help me so much. I have better health than I ever had in my life. I sleep well at night, and can work all day without feeling tired. I give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound all the credit, for I know it has cured me of all my troubles. I would not do without your remedies for anything."

When a woman has severe backache she has some serious trouble that will sooner or later declare itself.

Mrs. E. Furton, of Meade, Mich., found that her backache was caused by a tumor, which three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound expelled. This is Mrs. Furton's letter:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Two years ago I was troubled with constant backache and headache, and was very nervous. I resolved to try your medicine and took two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and on taking the third a tumor was expelled. I was a little frightened and sent for the doctor; and he said that it was fortunate for me that it came away. I got quite well after that and have your Compound alone to thank for my recovery."

The safe way to guard against trouble is to get Mrs. Pinkham's advice when the backache first appears. A letter to her at Lynn, Mass., describing your case fully will receive a prompt reply without charge.

"Your Medicine Is a Friend to Women."

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I wish to tell you the great good your medicine has done me. I do not feel like the same woman. I have suffered terribly. Had womb and kindey trouble, leucorrhœa, very severe pains in hips and sides of abdomen, headache, was nervous, menses were irregular. I have now taken four bottles of your Vegetable Compound, and the backache has left me, menses are regular, can sleep well, and awake in the morning feeling much rested. Your medicine is indeed a friend to women. I wish that I could tell every woman what a wonderful medicine it is. I cannot praise it enough."—Mrs. Anna J. Fenstermaker Pine Summit, Pa.

ASK YOURSELF A FEW QUESTIONS

If Deering Ideal Harvesting Machines are not the best in the world, why is it that the Deering works are the largest in the world?

If there is not a greater demand for Deering machines than for any other make why is it that the Deering works employ over six thousand five hundred skilled mechanics—more than twice as many as any other reaper plant in the world?

If Deering machines have not earned the right to universal approval why is it that the Deering works are increasing the output for 1899 by 50,000 machines as against the product of 1898?

If Deering ball and roller bearings are not applied to binders and mowers in the only correct way why is it that competitors are at their wits' ends to make their machines as light draft as the Deering Ideals?

If you had the pictures of our children, you could see at a glance that the last one is healthiest, prettiest and finest-looking of them all. The coming mother's disposition and temper remain unruffled throughout the ordeal, because this relaxing, penetrating liniment relieves the usual distress. A good-natured mother is pretty sure to have a good-natured child. The patient is kept in a strong, healthy condition, which the child also inherits. —We have received a program of the Butler commencement, which is held May 26, and among the names of of graduates, is that of our young friend Mary L. Jones. The chief feature of the evening will be the lectmre by Pres. Ashley of the Albion, Mich. College,

Fort Wayne Journal:—The directors of Wittenberg college, of Springfield, Ohio, one of the oldest Lutheran educational institutions in the country, have decided to admit women to the theological seminary, and upon completion of the course to confer the degree of B. D. upon them, the same as the men. The action was taken with but one dissenting vote.

—St. Joe News:—Quite a number of men are employed in the construction of the new railroad bridge over the river at this place, and the work of completing it is being pushed forward rapidly. The bridge will not be an overhead structure like the old one, but will be of a more modern design, known as the lattice girder. Twenty-one thousand rivets have to be welded before the job is completed. It will take about two weeks to finish the work.

The May Day Party

One of the finest parties given in Auburn for some time was the May Day Luncheon given by the Mesdames Robbins at the beautiful home of Mrs. A. C. Robbinsn on North Mal-st. The guests were met at the hall door by Master Ward Yesbera, who very gracefully presented them to two sweet little misses, Georgia Sembower and Geraldine Nusbaum, who stood at the foot of the stairway to show the guests the way to the dressing rooms above, and also to escort the guests to the parlor where the receiving party stood to welcome them. Mrs. Josie Bigelow of VanWert, O., assisted in receiving. The rooms were beautifully decorated with all the flowers of May.

Suspended by ribbons about the different rooms were hung cards on which were written conundrums about flowers which the guests were expected to answer. The luncheon was excellent and was served in six courses with exquisite taste, the crowning feature being the ice cream which was served in a novel style, in the shape of flowers and emblems. Name cards were placed at each plate, and at the close of the luncheon each was given a pansy decked card on which to write the answers to the conundrums. So many had guessed the same number, that it became necessary to draw for the prizes, which resulted in, Mrs. Aber receiving the first prize, a large bowl of sweet peas, and Mrs. John Zimmerman second prize, a beautiful bouquet of lilies of the valley.

About seventy guests enjoyed this delightful afternoon. Those present from out of town were, Mrs. Josie Bigelow, of VanWert, O., Mrs. Sembower and little daughter Georgia, of Garrett, Miss Kern, of Washington D. C., Miss Emma Johnson, of South Bend, Ind., Mrs. Hardendorf, of Clear lake, Ind., and Mrs. W. C. Hartman, of Roann, Ind.

The Nichols-Shepard Separator

The essential points in a Separator are capacity, thoroughness of separation, and simplicity and durability of construction. On each of these points the Nichols-Shepard Separator has great advantage over all other threshing machines. Any one of the nine sizes will thresh more and save more grain than the corresponding size of any other separator. The Nichols-Shepard Separator is as strongly, simply, yet perfectly made as a separator can be. The work of separation is done without the aid of pickers, raddles, forks, or other complicated parts that in other machines cause continual bother and expense by breaking or wearing out.

This shows the Nichols-Shepard Self-feeder loaded and ready for the racks.

COURT NEWS

Thursday's Daily.

The insurance case from Angola is going on, the time being consumed mainly by the attorneys reading long depositions in regard to the case. We have already given the nature of the case. The Insurance Company claim they rejected Gilbert's application for insurance, on the ground that he was not in sound health, but that their clerks by an oversight sent him a policy, and on this he paidonce or twice, before his death. The reading is quite tedious. At its conclusion, evidence began.

The only witness sworn so far, is Maj. Marsh, the vice-president of the company, which is the "Inter-state" of which we believe Dr. Nusbaum isa director. His evidence was to show that his company rejected the application of Gilbert, though not till after some payments had been received. Marsh came to Angola to pay back the money, He found Gilbert had gone to Mexico for his health and sent the money to him there, but the money was sent back to the company at Indianapolis. He is still on the stand as we close for today's copy.

Friday's Daily.

The evidence was concluded in the Angola Insurance case last evening and this morning arguments began. The first was for the plaintiff by Capt Gilbert, the next was for the company, by Mr. Powers, then one for the plaintif by Sol. Wood, then followed one for the defendant company by Latta of Indianapolis; Judge Roby had the closing argument. The drift of talk on both sides agrees with what we have already published. One part of the by laws of the company, the policy is binding if signed by president vice president and secretary. But the defense claim it should also be signed by the examining physician. Their by laws also say a policy is binding after one payment has been made. It appears that after the policy was sent to Gilbert, he was in possession of it nine months. Strong arguments were made on both sides. At 1:30 the case was given to the jury.

Saturday's Daily.

The jury went out yesterday in the Angola case, and wrestled with the case till after midnight. The verdict was read this morning and was in favor of Gilbert's heirs, giving them the full $2500 asked for. The foreman of the jury A. P., Foltz, was excused by the judge, and his place on the regular panel will be taken by John Baird. The jury were then discharged for the present to meet on Wednesday, May 31 Monday, will be taken up the injunction case of Dover vs Carnahan. On Tuesday there will be no court. On Wednesday the damage case of Anderson vs Lake Shore Railway, comes up before the jury.

Parnell's Superstition.

Parnell had some pet superstitions, according to his biographer, Barry O'Brien. "He would not pass another person on the stairs. He was horror-stricken to find himself sitting with three lighted candles; the fall of a picture in the room made him dejected for the entire afternoon, and he would have nothing to do with an important bill drawn up by a colleague because it happened to contain thirteen clauses. He also thought green a most unlucky color—a strange and inconvenient feeling for a Nationalist leader—and the sight of green banners at the political meetings he addressed often unnerved him."

Congressman Botkin's Statement

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 1, 1898.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, O.

MY DEAR DOCTOR:—It gives me pleasure to certify to the excellent curative qualities of your medicines:

Hon. J. D. BOTKIN,
Congressman-at-Large from Kansas.

Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin. I have been afflicted, more or less, for a quarter of a century with catarrh of the stomach and constipation; a residence in Washington has increased these troubles.

A few bottles of your medicines have given me almost complete relief, and I am sure that a continuation of their use will effect a permanent cure.

Pe-ru-na is surely a wonderful remedy for catarrhal affections.

J. D. BOTKIN.

GRAND OLD ROAD

The First in the United States Will be the Best.

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, '99—For three years Receivers Cowen and Murray of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad have been spending millions of dollars to place the historical old line in a condition to not only handle larger quantities of business but to do it expeditiously, cheaply and safely. How well they have succeeded is a matter, now, of railroad history, but there is still much to do and it is being done as rapidly as possible.

It was the acme of good judgment to begin work on the main lines east of the Ohio river, in order to carry forward, with speed, the vast quantities of freight that came from the B. & O. lines that join the main lines at Wheeling and Parkersburg. This improvement in physical condition being almost completed and the entire road furnished with new cars, in number exceeding thirty thousand, the Receivers have turned their attention to the lines west of the Ohio.

During the past two years plans have been formulated for very extensive changes in the tracks. For years and years, no effort had been made to cut down heavy grades or relieve excessive curvature, but in these days of sharp competition, one hundred thousand pound cars, ninty ton locomotives and fifty car trains, the roadway must give the engine the least resistance if traffic is to be handled at a low cost. Freight rates keep going down and the cost of transportation must precede them in the declining scale.

Modern and up-to-date railroad managers realize this condition and the B. & O. officials are now engaged meeting the emergency. One of the first moves was made in January when orders for fifty-three bridges were placed. Three concerns divided the contract and the structures are now being erected. They are necessary in order that much heavier motive power may be used between Benwood and Chicago.

Especial attention is being paid to the physical condition of the track. As fast as a heavy and constantly increasing traffic will permit, new ballast, new ties and new rail, of 85 pounds weight to the yard, are being substituted. In the course of a year or two the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad will have a track equal to the best and better than that used by most of its competitors.

But this is mere detail beside other improvements. There is to be, in all probability, a double track between Bellaire and Cambridge, Ohio, and it will cost considerably over a million of dollars. It may be that some other project will delay or prevent this work, but it is not at all likely as some further facilities must soon be provided for the heavy business on the Central Ohio division.

There are some steep hills on this division but they canpot be cut down and heavy power will have to be used. But there is a great opportunity to improve the Lake Erie division from Newark to Chicago Junction. An expenditure here of one hundred thousand dollars or so will result in a yearly saving of forty per cent in operating expenses, the estimate being based on the pulling capacity of the present freight locomotives which are by no means up-to-date or in first-class condition. With new power, which will be purchased, the saving will be very much greater.

The present double track, north of Newark, is to be extended two miles, making it four miles in length, and it is the aim of the management to reduce the northbound grades from a maximum of 47 feet to 35 feet per mile. At Utica, the hill is to be cut down nine feet, a mile of sidings laid and a new station erected.

A cut a mile long is to be made at Hunt's Hill and the grade reduced from 42 feet to 23 feet, north of Mt. Vernon. a cut will be made to reduce a 28 foot short pull to 23 feet. The heaviest work on the division is at Fredericktown; a cut 2¼ miles in length is to be made and the alignment will be slightly changed to permit the use of the present track while the new one is being constructed. The present grade is 47 feet to the mile and the new one will be 23 feet to the mile, a change that will make a great difference in handling trains, both in cost and speed.

The midland division from Columbus to Midland City will be greatly improved by the projected work at Morgan's trestle, which is nearly a mile long. Portions will be filled and the balance replaced by a steel viaduct. On the Chicago division, an already low grade road, not much can be done outside of increasing the capacity of sidings and extending the double tracks.

There is to be an eight mile stretch of double track built from Chicago Junction to Attica and two miles from Chicago Junction to New Haven. At Garrett there will be a double track for several miles east and west of the station and the double track out of South Chicago will be extended five miles. All of these improvements will tend to greatly facilitate the handling of trains and very materially increase the capacity of the road.

Many of these improvements are necessary on account of the B. & O's lake business, through the port of Sandusky. There has peen a marvelous growth of tonnage at this point since the receivers began nursing the traffic and encouraging shippers to patronize the B. & O. because of new equipment and improved service.

Last year the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road handled 43,888 cars at Sandusky against 23,824 in 1897. The iron ore weighed 161,968 tons, an increase of 104.123 tons over 1897, and there were 476,000 of coal loaded in vessels by the new improved dumping machines installed last spring. Then, too, there was quite a grain business, the elevator handling 2¼ millions bushels. Package freight, inbound, amounted to 5,911,052 pounds and outbound it came to 11,580,754 pounds.

From present indications the traffic of 1899 will greatly exceed that of former years, it being estimated that nearly 300,000 tons of iron ore and a million tons of coal will be handled. To expedite this enormous traffic, the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road is building a large storage yard near Sandusky has erected new ore unloaders and expects to build another coal loader, having purchased the dock property some time ago.

There is a bit of history connected with that portion of Lake Erie division between Monroeville and Sandusky. It was the second railroad built in the State of Ohio and is a tangent 15 miles long. The motive power, was originally horses.

When all of these improvements are completed, and it will take a year or a year and half to do it, there will be no railroad with better facilities for doing business, and the new policy of fostering local industries will undoubtedly work to the financial advantage of every town and city on the line from Philadelphia to Chicago and St. Louis.

New Invention

A New York inventor has patented a fire escape which is out of sight when put in use and does not occupy extra space in the room, consisting of a casing to be attached to the under side of chair, carrying a reel on which the rope ladder is wound

In a new automatic spring fishhook two pairs of steel wires, having hooked and pointed ends, are pivoted together in such a position that half of the ends act as bait-holders, and the rest are set to grip the fish as soon as it bites.

Package wrappers will appreciate a newly-patented twine cutter, in the shape of a finger ring, with a projection on the side having a sharp cutting blade at the bottom, the device being stamped out of one piece of flat metal, with one end bent to form the cutter.

Deaf persons will appreciate a new telephone designed to aid their hearing having a small receiver to be attached to the coat lapel, with wires running to a small generator in the pocket and thence to the ear, ending in an artificial drum to be placed inside the ear.

Perfection Found at Last

Decatur, Ill., Jan 24, 1898.

Dear Sirs:—I received a gun shot wound in '64 while in the army which caused partial paralysis of the bowels and from that time to the present I have had to use a laxative. I have tried a great many kinds of medicines in that time but have never found any as effective or that has been as near natural as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Yours truly, JOHN ARMSTRONG,

The Oldest Horse

S. M. George, a veteran of the rebellion, has a horse 38 years old, a fact easily proved as it was a colt in 1861 when he went into the service. He challenges any one to beat it. The horse has always worked hard, and was a good saddle horse. He can still jump a high fence, and his owner often drives him over to Concord.

FARMERS, ATTENTION

Before breeding your mares call at D. N. Myer's Feed Barn in Auburn and see his two horses. English Shire, 1700 pounds and the imported Cleveland Bay 1350 pounds. You will always find them at home.

OATS.

We have received the following: Oat, singular; oats, plural; the word is used generally in its plural form. See Webster.

Cause of the War.

A few thoughtless people blame the American soldiers for the outbreak in the Philippines. But it is a matter of record, that the natives, without cause, drew their army around the city of Manila, making it necessary for us to establesh a line of troops around and in the town to be ready for what was plainly the object of the natives. It was soon learned that they had organized a secret society in the city, to rise at a given signal, and kill and burn. They had also told some wild natives from the interior, whom they had gathered together in an obscure quarter of the city, that when the signal was given, they, the wild natives, would have a chance to get as many American heads as they could carry home, for that is the way those natives do. Feb. 4, the signal was given, and Americans in the city saw flames break out in various quarters of the city. Shots were fired on passing Americans from behind houses, etc, and our soldiers in the city had hard work all that night and next day, to stop the murderous attemps in the town. On the lines of intrenchments about the city, we had been attacked at all points. And there is where the signal for trouble had been given. The native soldiers, believing because we had been careful not to offend them, that we were afraid of them, had become very impudent and it had become hard work to keep their soldiers from getting through our lines. They would try at one point and then another and it appears that they tried to provoke us to shoot at them and that this was to be the signal And it at last came out that way. Gen, McArthur now settles this question in his official report just received at Washington. Here are his very words:

"At about 8:30 p. m. Feb. 4, an insurgent patrol, consisting of four armed soldiers, entered our territory at Blockhouse No. 7. and advanced to the little village of Santol, which was occupied from the pipe-line outpost of the Nebraska regiment. The American sentinel challenged twice, and when, the insurgent patrol continued to advance, he fired, whereupon the patrol retired to blockhouse No. 7, whence fire immediately opened by the entire insurgent outpost at that point."

This settles the question as to which side was to blame for bringing on the fight. We had given them no cause in the first place, for gathering an army, and putting a line of soldiers all about us. Had they gone about their business, they would have been well treated and no trouble would have occured.

Discovered by a Woman.

Another great discovery has been made, and that too, by a lady in this country. "Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She finally discovered a way to recovery, by purchasing of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night; and with two bottles, has been absolutely cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus writes W. C. Hamaick & Co., of Shelby, N, C. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00. Every bottle guaranteed.

Turning The Sod.

A story from English, Ind., reminds one of the old story in the German story books, where a man died while saying "My sons, go out and dig"——He did not finish the sentence, and his lazy sons, took it to mean that he had buried his money. So they fell to work and dug the farm over and over. The result was better than a bag of gold, for they had splendid crops,

The story in question reads:

George W. Patton, who died recently, leaving $1,000 buried in an unknown place, is causing his heirs to dig all over the farm. A short time before he died, he offered the money to his wife, but she told him to keep it and he deposited it somewhere on the farm.

What a Doctor Says

Pana, Ill., Jan 24, 1898.

Gents:—I have used many medicines, but think I got the best results from your Pepsin Syrup. One other member of my family also used it with the same happy effect. The complaint for which we used the Syrup was stomach trouble called in the books Gastralgia, a great deal of acid eructions (belchings) with flatulence of the stomach. Very truly, DR. W. E. MCDIVITT.

Indiana G. A. R.

The Indiana Grand Army of the Republic held its encampment at Terre Haute. The parade numbered 6,000 persons, the features being the appearance of Gov. Mount and staff on horseback, the presence of the Culver Cadets, and a half dozen Indiana militia companies, with two batteries, and the marching of 1,000 school children.

Among the resolutions adopted was one which congratulated Gen. Lawton on his bravery and success in Cuba and in the Philippines, and hailed him as an Indiana soldier and brother Indiana G. A. R., a member of the Fort Wayne post. Indianapolis was chosen as the next place of meeting.

Sold Revenue Stamps.

The police department at Fort Wayne, Ind., arrested for vagrancy a fairly dressed young man, giving his name as John Ford. His graft was to buy some small article and pay for the same in postage and revenue stamps. When searched he had a number of revenue stamps, a loaded bull-dog revolver and a new silverine watch, open face. There is not much doubt but what all these articles have been stolen. Any one knowing of a robbery having been done, where articles of this nature were taken, and will correspond with H. A. Gorsline, Superintendent of Police, Fort Wayne, Ind., for the next twelve days, can get the full information.

Two Persons Cremated.

Two persons, a man and a woman, perished in a fire that destroyed a lodging house kept by Fay Hilton, in West Forty-seventh street, New York. The man was known by the name of Thompson, and he is supposed to be a fish dealer. The other victim is a negress, whose name is not known, who was killed by leaping from the top story of the building. The fire had gained great headway before it was discovered, and Thompson was suffocated in his room.

England's Coal Exhausted.

At the general meeting of the Institute of Mining, held in London, England, the address of President Longion was devoted to a pessimistic review of the exhaustion of British coal and iron. He said the evidence all pointed to the fact that "Fifty years hence we shall be practically dependent upon the United States for cheap coal, iron and steel, and our sons will find an alliance with the United States for coaling our navy imperative."

Indian Uprising Is Feared.

A special from Miles City, Mont., says: Serious indications of Cheyenne uprisings are apparent. Armed Indians drove Mrs. Lorain and child from home, burned haystacks and killed a steer belonging to Henry Bailey, Deputy Sheriff. Deputy Sheriff Smith and posse have gone to Lame Deer and will undertake to arrest the marauding Indians.

Has Faith in Porto Rico.

Gen. Guy V. Henry, who has just been superceded as Governor General of Porto Rico by Gen. Davis, called upon the President the other day to pay his respects. Gen. Henry talks enthusiastically of the island. He believes it has a prosperous future and that the people will eventually make good citizens.

Envoys Go Home.

Found After Twenty Years.

Andrew Hinklings, a business man of Locust Point, Ohio, found his mother, whom he had not seen for twenty years. He heard her name accidentally mentioned on the streets of Genoa and this led to the reunion. They have lived within a few miles of each other all the time.

Kills Husband Number Five.

Mrs. Charles Hutchinson, aged 26 years, of Arcada, Ind., and five times married, shot and killed her husband. She is now in jail. Mrs. Hutchinson claims that the killing was done in self-defense, she having been attacked by her husband, armed with a huge knife.

MOTHER AND SON DIE.

Mystery in Burning of an Ohio House—Fired to Conceal Crime.

The charred remains of Mrs. Rachel Austin and her son William were recovered from the ruins of their burned home in Zane township, Ohio, and the youngest son, Ernest, aged 24 years, has a bullet hole in his breast. The family of Wesley Haines, a farmer, was aroused by some one knocking at the door. Mr. Haines answered the call and found Ernest Austin, faint from a bullet wound in his breast. He said that about an hour before he had been called to the door by a robber and shot in the chest. Austin continued in broken sentences to say that the home was in flames and his mother and brother were no doubt dead. With this Austin swooned away and was carried into the house. Mr. Haines then went to the Austin homestead, about half a mile distant, and there found the burning timbers and debris of the once comfortable home. The neighborhood was aroused and in the ruins were found the charred bodies of Mrs. Rachel Austin and her son William.

DETERMINED TO END HIS LIFE.

Omaha Man Twice Hangs Himself in His Former Sweetheart's Home.

Henry Christiansen twice attempted to kill himself at the home of his sweetheart, Anna Smith, in Omaha. He had been engaged to the young woman, but she decided not to marry him. When Christiansen called the other night he found that Miss Smith had two visitors. He secured a rope, tied it around his neck and hanged himself to a transom in the hallway. He was cut down by Miss Smith and the two men who had called to see her. Christiansen was quiet for a time, but at length he seized the lamp and hurled it at the young woman and set the house on fire. The flames were quickly extinguished. Christiansen then hanged himself to the transom again and was again cut down. He was arrested.

LIGHTNING'S WORK IN TEXAS.

One Man Killed in Erath County—The Wind Wrecks Buildings.

The severest electrical storm known in many years created havoc in the northern part of Erath County, Texas. Lightning struck Mount Pleasant Church, near Lingleville. The church was crowded with persons at the time, and a panic ensued. William Kauffman was struck dead, and nine other persons were fatally injured. The church itself was partly wrecked. At Stephenville many houses were damaged. The Cumberland Presbyterian Church was unroofed. The Methodist Church at Alarm Creek was demolished. A report says that eight persons were killed or injured. Heavy damage was done all over the county.

THIRD OF A MILLION BURNS.

Brisk Blaze in Brooklyn Destroys Twenty Buildings.

Fire of unknown origin started in a building in Freeman street, Brooklyn, used by Vells Brothers as a planing mill, and spread rapidly until nearly an entire block was destroyed. The total loss is estimated at $350,000. The flames extended to Eagle and Kent streets, destroying a number of houses. The property destroyed included four factories, a planing mill, a blacksmith shop and fourteen dwellings.

Review of the Week's Trade.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "While the buying of 200,000 tons of Bessemer pig at Pittsburg gave reason for the advance in price to $16.50, with gray forge quoted at $15 per ton, it is not quite as clear as it might be that the output, which was 253,000 tons weekly, according to the Pittsburg record, and has since been largely increased by the addition of many furnaces, will continue to fall below the demand. For the requirement in various departments for manufactured products, it must be recognized, is scarcely measurable, and does not seem as much diminished as might be expected by higher prices and long delay in delivery. The shipments of boots and shoes from the East have been, for two weeks of May, 22 per cent larger than last year and 50.9 per cent larger than in 1892. Leather shows hesitation. Speculators are doing a large business in wool, some foreign and some American. The orders for woolen goods are decidedly better. Cotton declined a small fraction, owing to freer port movement; but there was a recovery of all the decline in middling uplands and a net gain in option prices. Failures for the week have been 147 in the United States, against 250 last year, and 17 in Canada, against 29 last year."

To Lengthen Man's Life.

A discovery which, it is claimed, solves the problem of circumventing old age, has just been made public by Prof. Joseph R. Hawley and Alex. C. Wiener of the Chicago Clinical school. The return to youth, it is asserted, is produced by hypodermic injections of the lymphatic fluid of animals, particularly young goats. The discovery was made a year ago, and subsequent demonstrations of its efficacy are asserted. The general theory of the discovery is that, if the mineral deposits which accumulate in the bones in the process of life can be replaced with the "life cells" contained in the lymphatic glands of goats, deterioration of the bones will be prevented and elasticity and youth will be retained in the system much longer. The discovery was made, it is stated, by Prof. B. F. Roberts, who spent thirty years upon the theory. The specific purpose of the discoverer was to find an animal derivative to correct the effects of senility. The anatomical changes during the infusion of the lymph compound are described as an infiltration of tissues from human bones. The apostles of the discovery do not claim that a man or woman thus charged with goat's "life cells" will live forever, but they say life will be prolonged, perhaps doubled.

Races Clash at Enid.

A negro cake walk in the opera house in Enid, Okla., broke up in a riot between whites and blacks, started by the negroes shooting into a crowd of white men. Three white men were wounded, when the whites returned the fire, fatally wounding four negroes and slightly wounding several others. More than fifty shots were fired before the trouble was quelled.

Train Wrecker Arrested.

At Albert Lea, Minn., Nic Mundahl was arrested by St. Louis Railway detectives for three attempts at train wrecking. None were successful, owing to the height of the cowcatchers on the engines. Five passenger trains passed over ties that had been laid on a triangle in the track. Mundahl admits his guilt, and was bound over to await the action of the grand jury.

Dawson City Destroyed.

Messengers have arrived in Victoria, B. C., with news of a fire that laid three-fourths of Dawson City, N. W. T., in ashes. The loss is estimated at from $5,000,000 to $4,000,000. No lives were lost.

Extra Session in New York.

The New York Legislature, called in special session by Gov. Roosevelt to amend the Ford franchise tax bill, met at Albany and listened to the reading of the Governor's message.

Alaskan Travel to Be Easy.

R. P. Elliot, an extensive mine owner of Dawson City, Alaska, is stopping in St. Louis. Mr. Elliot has just returned to the United States after an absence of nearly a year and a half, which he has spent in the gold fields of the Klondike. He is full of enthusiasm over the new country. He left Dawson City in March and will return late in the year. He said: "The Yukon and White Pass Railway is now completed from Skaguay to the summit of the pass, a distance of about eighteen miles, and for a distance of about twelve miles farther the roadbed is ready for the rails. The grading is being done right up to within a few miles of Bennett, and by July 4 the management expects to have trains running between Skaguay and Bennett, where passengers can take a steamer to White Horse rapids, thence by the tramway around the rapids, about four miles in length, to the other side, where he can take a steamer direct to Dawson. When these connections are made the trip from Seattle to Dawson can be made in from ten to twelve days. It will be a wonderful trip."

DETERMINE TO DIE TOGETHER.

Young Man Kills Himself, but the Girl Loses Nerve and Faints.

Balked in their plans to get married, Miss Lulu Ford and Benjamin Wilhite of Dade County, Mo., concluded that life was not worth the living, so they sought death together. Wilhite was 18 years old and Miss Ford a year younger. The couple had been sweethearts from childhood, but their relatives considered them too young to marry. Wilhite called on Miss Ford. In order that they might confer without interruption he proposed a drive. "If we cannot marry let us die together," said Wilhite. The girl assented. He had a revolver and proposed that each commit suicide. They drove to a lonely spot, left the buggy and went to the side of the road. He kissed her for the last time and while his arms were still about her neck, he raised the pistol and sent a bullet through his heart. Miss Ford picked up the weapon and turned it toward herself. The trigger refused to act and before she could try again she fell in a faint over the body of her lover. She did not recover consciousness until picked up by passing farmers.

NEW WALL COLLAPSES.

Three Laborers Severely Injured by Accident at New York.

The wall of the new building at 126 West Eleventh street, New York, caved in, severely injuring three laborers. Their names are: John Donlon, fractured skull; Louis Gosso, fractured skull; Frank Forisso, lacerated chin and internal injuries. The cause of the accident is unknown. The men are employed by Contractor Joseph Cody. The men were in an excavation. Old buildings had been torn down and the men were digging for a new building. A sustaining wall, 35 feet long and 10 feet high, fell and buried nine workmen.

Big Fire in a Mining Town.

Fire almost completely wiped out the mining town of Jerome, Ariz. Building after building succumbed, with a population almost powerless to prevent the destruction, for the town has no water supply of consequence and practically no fire department. Dynamite was used in blowing up buildings to check and prevent further spread of the flames. The postoffice, Masonic Hall and the company stores and hospital were saved by special effort. Many persons were injured. There is comparatively little insurance and a majority of the losses are total.

White-Cappers Kill a Negro.

Tom Linton, a negro, at Camp Creek, six miles north of Fayetteville, Ga., was killed by masked men, who burst his door in with an ax and shot him twice. Several negroes were whipped by White-cappers in that vicinity and it is believed that the mob intended dealing likewise with Linton, but that he opened fire on them and they shot in self-defense.

Vessel Burns at Her Dock.

The German bark Ariadne caught fire while lying at the Standard Oil Company's pier No. 2 at Bayonne, N. J. The flames spread to the pier, which was destroyed, together with about 600 barrels of oil. The Ariadne was burned to the water line. The loss on the Ariadne is estimated at $25,000, on the pier $10,000 and on the oil $2,500.

Ten Thousand in Quarantine.

A case of smallpox was discovered in the almshouse on Blackwell's Island, New York harbor, and as a result of the subsequent investigation by the Board of Health officers the entire island, on which there are about 10,000 persons, was put under quarantine.

ROUTE WHICH ADMIRAL DEWEY WILL TAKE ON HIS RETURN TRIP FROM MANILA.

ADMIRAL DEWEY sailed on his way to the United States at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon. Gen. Otis and Admiral Dewey exchanged farewell calls during the morning. All of the warships fired an admiral's salute and manned the sides, the bands playing "Home, Sweet Home" and "Auld Lang Syne" as the admiral's flagship sailed away. As Dewey comes sailing home his voyage through the Indian ocean, Red sea and Mediterranean will offer to the powers an opportunity to honor the American sailor with naval reviews, parades and banquets on shore. His route takes him first of all to Hong Kong, whence he sailed a trifle over a year ago to smash the don. Dewey will sail in the Olympia from Hong Kong to Singapore, thence to Aden and Port Said, Alexandria, Malta, Algiers, Gibraltar into the Atlantic. This will enable France, Italy and Great Britain to assemble fleets to act as escorts or otherwise pay tribute to the American admiral. While it is not known officially that the Olympia will put into any of the ports named, it is certain that if she does the nations in power will see that the visits are memorable ones. France has already prepared to make a demonstration in Algiers.

The admiral may cruise up the western coast of Europe, as semi-official dispatches indicate that the British wish him to visit the island kingdom. In case he decides to run up to Portsmouth it is probable a fleet will be assembled in the Mediterranean under some admiral high in rank to escort the American flagship to her anchorage. The same fleet will also likely attend the Olympia a few leagues to sea on the homeward trip out of Portsmouth. If the admiral sees fit to drop anchor in any of the ports named he will receive attentions not only from the naval but the civil and military authorities. The Governors of Malta and Gibraltar, while no specific instructions have been made public, will certainly exchange official calls and also extend to Admiral Dewey and the officers of his ship the freedom of the port, with a state banquet. Similar courtesies will be extended in the French ports where stops can properly be made.

Admiral Dewey will be absolutely free to extend his trip over as much time as he feels will be necessary to respond properly to friendly manifestations. He is not under hurry orders, although he will not delay his return to a home port beyond a reasonable time. Still, he can exercise his own judgment in the matter. The officers of the bureau of navigation estimate that Admiral Dewey will reach New York about July 30. They figured out that the Olympia will take seventy days in making the voyage, including twenty days for docking, coaling and other stops. These are the outside figures, and it is possible that the admiral may reach New York a week sooner.

STEAMER PARIS ON THE ROCKS.

American Liner Goes on the Manacles Off the Cornwall Coast.

The American line steamer Paris, formerly the United States auxiliary cruiser Yale, which went ashore while en route from Southampton for New York, stranded on Lowland point, inside the Manacle rocks, near the scene of the recent fatal wreck of the Atlantic transport line steamer Mohegan.

The Paris left Southampton punctually at the time set for her sailing Saturday and her voyage was without incident until 2 o'clock Sunday morning. The passengers were suddenly aroused by a loud and peculiar sound, which denoted to those who had knowledge of maritime affairs that the vessel was scraping on a rock. There was much alarm among the passengers at first, but there was no disorder, and nothing that had the slightest semblance of a panic. All made their way on deck as quickly as possible, but before many of them had left their cabins the grating sound ceased. The Paris had, apparently, gone over a ledge, and taken bottom almost immediately afterward, for by the time everybody was on deck the vessel was at a standstill. The place where the Paris stranded is in sight of land, and is so close to the wreck of the Mohegan that the masts of the latter vessel, which are still standing, can be seen from the decks of the American liner.

CAPT. WATKINS.

A few minutes after the ship struck distress signals were burned and rockets were sent up. These immediately attracted attention, and in a short time tugboats were racing for the scene of the accident. The lifeboat from Falmouth and lifeboats from other places were not long in reaching the stranded ship, but there was nothing for them to do but stand by. The passengers were quickly transferred to two tugs and taken to Falmouth, where all were safely landed.

No explanation was given for the ship being so far off her course, but it is most likely that a heavy fog that was prevailing caused Captain Watkins to lose his bearings. Captain Watkins says, however, that he is unable to account for the unfortunate affair. The man who was acting as lookout forward says that he saw the loom of the land through the vapor and shouted, "Land ahead." The engines were immediately reversed, and they were going full speed astern when the ship struck. The Paris carried 360 passengers and 115 bags of mail.

The Manacles are among the most dangerous rocks in the English channel. They lie near the Lizard light, about twenty-five miles east of Land's End. It was on the Manacles that the Atlantic transport liner Mohegan struck on the night of Oct. 14 last year, when two-thirds of those on board perished. Only fifty-two persons of the passengers and crew escaped. The Mohegan struck the rocks on a clear night in fair weather, and how she got out of her course far enough to throw her on the rocks has never been satisfactorily cleared up.

The rocks themselves are connected by ledges. They lie about three-quarters of a mile from the shore, at Manacle point, and all but one are covered at high water. Penwin, the outermost rock, is marked by a black bell buoy with a staff and ball with the word "Manacles" on its head. The Mohegan struck on the Vase rock, which is close to Penwin, where a bare twelve feet of water covered the rocks.

FIRE WIPES OUT DAWSON.

Klondike City Swept by Flames, Causing $4,000,000 Loss.

Dawson City, the famous capital of the Klondike, has been practically obliterated by fire that destroyed the entire business section and many of the residences and caused a loss in all of not less than $4,000,000. Nor is the financial loss the most serious consideration involved, for, save the American Camping Company's and North American Trading and Transportation Company's warehouses, no supply house is left to the district, and more than three-quarters of the population of the mining town find themselves without food or clothing supplies and homeless, and with the opening of river navigation that will enable fresh stocks to be received yet more than a month away.

News of the great fire, the fourth of an expensive series in the Klondike this season, was brought out by three couriers—Thos. P. Reilley, Commissioner Ogilvie's special messenger; L. F. Humes, a son of ex-Mayor Humes of Seattle, and Frank Tokales, a Russian scout. They took their lives in their hands to carry Dawson's tale of misfortune to the outside world, and, with the assistance of the mounted police facilities and co-operation, got through without disaster.

A veritable panic reigned in Dawson the day after the fire, because hundreds of tons of provisions were burned up and it will be at least five weeks before any considerable amount of provisions can be obtained from the outside. An area of ground three-quarters of a mile long and four blocks in width was eaten over by the flames, leaving absolutely nothing but ashes. Martial law was declared by the mounted police and the men were patrolling the burned district day and night. The owners of some of the ruins claimed that there was treasure beneath the ashes. Thieves were plentiful, and an improvised dungeon was reported full of accused persons. The Bank of British North America was a heavy loser. The rather flimsy vault did not withstand the heat, and the papers in it were destroyed. The bank also lost a large amount of gold dust.

The opinion is that Dawson will never recover from the visitation, present rebuilding being impossible owing to lack of material, and the leading men of the camp and public officials favor another site for the capital. By a miracle the destruction of the town was unaccompanied by any loss of life, although several firemen and others received burns and other injuries.

FRONT STREET, DAWSON CITY, LOOKING WEST.

WEST IS SURE TO WIN.

Either Hopkins or Henderson Will Be the Next Speaker.

A Washington correspondent says that as time passes on the opinion grows that the speakership will go to the West. Old politicians assert that Sherman is becoming steadily weaker and that there is no longer the slightest chance of his having a united East behind him. Between Hopkins and Henderson, this correspondent asserts, the chances at present seem slightly in favor of the latter. Henderson's election would be a continuation in power of the "Reed" element. Henderson is a member of the Committee on Rules, which runs Congress. It makes orders of business under the rules or it refuses to make orders. It suggests changes in the rules and then steers them through. Of course, if the House does not like the work of the Committee on Rules, it can reject it, but it seldom does so. Many elements of popularity are held by Henderson and some qualifications for the speakership are admitted to be his. His loyalty to the administration is not less than his loyalty to the rules of the House. Hopkins, it is claimed by many, would make a better Speaker, according to anti-Reed standards.

As between Hopkins and Henderson, the East would be pretty evenly divided. Both have warm personal friends among the Eastern members, and it will be as difficult for the managers to throw the Eastern vote as a whole to either as it would to combine them for an Eastern candidate. The outlook is for the selection of the Speaker by the Western men in the next House. The contest will be in the West, with Pennsylvania's vote given to the probable winner in order to save the clerkship, and New York will finally be disposed of in the same way to secure the doorkeeper and the patronage which goes with that office.

STRIFE IN PEACE CONGRESS.

Secrecy of The Hague Sessions Causes Dissatisfaction.

Baron de Staal, president of the peace congress, on Sunday received final instructions from the Czar. These deal with the realization of compulsory arbitration, whether by a supreme tribunal of several of the great powers or a private tribunal composed by the powers whose interests are at stake, with the subsequent friendly mediation of a third power.

BARON DE STAAL.

The impenetrable secrecy of the proceedings of the conference has caused dissatisfaction. The press representatives complain that the methods adopted would be justifiable only if the press were the implacable enemy of peace arbitration. Representatives of several influential journals resolved to leave.

Judge John H. Baker of the United States District Court at Indianapolis dealt a blow at lynching by holding that the heirs of Marion Tyler, who was lynched at Scottsburg several months ago, had a right of action for damages against the sheriff of the county and his bondsmen. The decision was rendered on a motion to overrule a demurrer to the complaint. In holding that a sheriff is responsible for the prisoners in his care the court said in part: "If the law imposes a duty of care in respect to animals and goods which he has taken into his possession by virtue of his office why should not the law impose the duty of care upon him in respect to human beings who are in his custody by virtue of his office? Is a helpless prisoner, in the custody of a sheriff, less entitled to his care than a bale of goods or a dumb beast? The law is not subject to any such reproach."

THE DANCING LIGHTS.

From out the country spaces cool and clear
We flash into the maze of city streets,
What pageant this that straightway doth appear?
What land of faery that our vision greets?

A feast of lights! And as we roll along,
As if each one some lovely dancer held,
They interweave as to some choric song
Which from the dark mysteriously welled;

To whose soft tune the dancers round and round
Move in a rapture tremulous and intense,
With languorous paces that make faintest sound
And ever duller and more drowsy sense.

The dancing lights! Too lingeringly I gazed
On their warm motions till, as one who reels
When by some beauteous, blinding vision dazed,
And then, back to himself returning, feels

Right glad of heart; so, then, it was with me
As, looking up, I saw the heaven's calm
Shedding the light of stars so silently
That on my heart that stillness fell like balm.

Far off and cool, each, in his perfect sphere,
Held, as if motionless, his awful way;
Star unto star discoursing crystal clear
As when they sang creation's primal lay.

Ah me! I would that when the dancing lights
Of wayward passion seek my soul to sway
With their wild motion, from those meaner sights
I might be strong to turn my eyes away.

To where th' eternal stars so purely shine—
Truth, Beauty, Good—and by that vision blest—
Lifting my heart to make its clearness mine,
Taste then, earth-bound, the everlasting rest.

A Dead Man's Eyes.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nev., in the flush of the great Comstock lode: A man strolled down C street one June evening, and then struck into a trail which led upward along the slant of Mount Davidson. He was a large, broad-shouldered, full-bearded man. At a point where the trail diverged he stopped as if for a short rest, and, with his hat in his hand, turned to view the scene below him.

The sun was approaching the horizon. Everywhere the sky was a cobalt-blue, save in the far distance, where it changed to a delicate purple and gradually melted into long, low streaks of red, gold and shimmering crimson. Looking down the canyon, Sugar Loaf stood darkly silhouetted against the brilliant background, and past it—miles further down and away—the plains lay sleeping in the evening haze. In the middle distance, the big red buildings of the shafts and mills, with their tall, steamboat smokestacks, were sharply outlined; on every side the white dumps seemed to flow out of the sagebrush hills, and beneath him clustered the motley and jumbled mass of houses tacked to the steep mountain side—Nevada's chief city.

Another man trudged up the trail and paused when he descried the figure ahead of him. He was not cast in the heroic mold of the first. His face betrayed the Latin blood. There was a look of vindictive envy in his small, bead-like eyes as he watched the contented man above him. He wondered if all the things they said about Jim Sanders were true. Why was it he had no partner and worked his claim alone? Was there any truth in the rumor that Jim's claim was paying well and that he was keeping his money hid instead of banking it? As to his own claim—well, Gus was a good and uncomplaining worker, and the cabin was all right to sleep in. Mining was a gamble anyway, and so was faro. Still one knew there was money in faro, if the cards came rightly. But this evening Jose Casadra was broke. A week before he had won a thousand dollars at a single sitting.

After a little while the object of his gaze moved on and Casadra followed, keeping well in the rear. When he arrived at the Sanders cabin, Jim stood in the doorway.

"Hello, Joe!"

"Hello, Jim!"

"How they comin'?"

"Damned bad," savagely.

"Better leave the chips alone, Joe—there's nothing in it," said Jim, philosophically. "Why don't you help the poor Dutchman out? More money in that, Joe."

"Advice is cheap," replied Casadra, ill-naturedly. "D'ye think ye'd be willin' to give me anything else?"

"I might," said Jim, clamly knocking the ashes out of his pipe against his boot-heel.

"Then lend me a hundred dollars."

"No, Joe, I won't; it wouldn't do ye any good."

"To hell with your advice!" exclaimed Casadra, angrily, striding swiftly away and up the trail to the cabin he shared with Gus.

The next morning, on his way to town, he stopped at Jim's cabin. In his mind was a half-formed resolution to say some commonplace thing to Jim which the latter might accept as an apology for his rudeness of the previous evening. There was no sense in making an enemy of him. He threw away his cigarette and hesitatingly approached the door, which stood ajar, and looked in. What he saw startled him. Jim was lying on his side on the bed, with one arm thrown over his head. His big gray eyes were wide open and seemed to be looking Casadra full in the face.

"Mornin', Jim."

There was no response—not even the quiver of an eyelid. Casadra watched him uneasily for a moment, and then turned and went on his way to the town. He wondered if Jim always slept in such a queer fashion, and if such a sleep was a sound one? It was late in the night when he passed the cabin again. The door was still ajar, and all was dark within.

The following day, shortly after sunrise, found him before the partly opened door. He had a premonition of what he would see as he suddenly pushed it wide open. Jim was still lying on his side with his arm over his head, the open eyes fixed on the doorway. In two steps Casadra was beside him. He put out his hand, involuntarily withdrew it for a second, and then, with an effort, placed it on the forehead of the man in bed. The touch was icily cold. Down over the heart went the hand; there was no response from that fountain head. Then Jose knew he was not looking upon sleep. Murder or suicide? He threw off the bedclothes, expecting to see blood, but there was none. Just then he saw a sheet of writing paper lying on a table by the bedside. Picking it up eagerly, he read:

"Dear Brother: I have been taken suddenly ill to-night. If the worst should happen, when you come on, go at once into the shaft. In the second drift, exactly twenty-four feet from the shaft, dig——"

In an instant the paper was crushed in his hand and thrust into his shirt-bosom. Furtively he looked around, as if in fear of being detected. He never thought of the body in the bed until his wandering gaze fell upon the pallid face and the distended eyes staring fixedly at him. Nervously he moved to the door; the eyes followed him. He stepped almost behind the bed and yet felt himself within the range of the awful vision. Many dead men he had seen before, but some one had always closed their eyes for them. These eyes seemed to move like those of some old portrait.

It was late in the afternoon when he notified the coroner of his discovery. The body was taken down to the undertaker and the coroner decided an inquest unnecessary. Sanders belonged to a Masonic order that took charge of the funeral arrangements. The fact that Casadra left Virginia City the night of the day the body was discovered was noted by some, but no especial significance was attached to his departure.

Two months later in a gambling house at El Paso:

A crowd of men sitting and standing three deep about the faro table; the dealer pushed the cards out of the nickel-plated box, unconcernedly paying the lucky bets and sweeping away the others; every one oppressively silent; all eyes on the different stacks of chips and the fateful box before the dealer; the money-drawer of the table pulled far out, disclosing the shining twenties; and Jose Casadra "keeping cases," betting heavily, and losing.

But he was too old a gambler to betray by an expression which way the weather vane of fortune pointed, and when he had lost three heavy bets in succession, not a muscle of his face changed as he calmly put a large stake on the ace to win and "coppered" the king for an equal amount. A hand reached over the fringe of the crowd and placed a modest number of chips on the same cards. The ace won; the king lost. Like all of his superstitious fraternity, he was quick to notice the slightest incident connected with a change of luck, and now waited for the hand before making his next venture. Again it came over the heads of the crowd, and this time played a combination of the five, six, seven, eight and nine to win, and the queen and jack to lose. Instantly Jose had $200 on the same bets. Once more he was successful. When it came to call "the turn," the party behind him bet "tray-deuce." Jose did the same. The tray and deuce came out in the order named. Then he cashed in his chips a winner, and getting up from the table, pushed through the crowd to see who it was he had so luckily followed.

The man was in a distant corner of the room by himself. Jose's dark face became suddenly livid, for he found himself looking into the eyes of Jim Sanders. The eyes were in the head of a tall, heavily-built, and smooth-faced man.

"Who—are—you?" weakly gasped Jose, backing away.

"Who am I?" replied the other in a jocular way, although his eyes belied it. "Who am I? Why, don't ye know me?"

"Not—not—Jim?" came Jose's hoarse whisper, as he gazed in incredulous fright. But the blood was slowly coming back into his face. The voice was different, if the eyes were not.

"No, I'm Tom—Jim's brother. Jim's dead, ye know."

"Yes, —I—I—know, but your eyes? Damn you! Where'd you get those eyes?" The other advanced a step. "My God! It is Jim!" he almost screamed, as he cringed in abject terror against the wall.

"Say, what kind of a feller are ye anyhow, to be so skeart about a feller's brother? S'pose I hev got Jim's eyes? Ain't they good enough? Jim hed a little the best o' me—he was a half-hour older. I jest kem from Virginny. Everybody thought Jim left a stake, but he didn't, pore feller—leastways, none that I could find. How long since you been thar?"

Some of Jose's confidence was returning. He muttered an unintelligible reply.

"How much money you got?"

The colossal impudence of the question would have astounded any stranger. Jose looked angrily amazed. He started to reply with an oath, when suddenly his face changed.

"Don't look at me like that!" he whined.

"How much money you got?" repeated the big man, calmly but remorselessly.

Jose struggled with himself to keep silent; but the cold, deliberate and judging eyes compelled him to speak and tell the truth.

"Four—thousand—dollars," he faltered, barely above a whisper.

"So you've got $4,000 now?" echoed the other, in tones of great satisfaction.

Abject fright again swept into Jose's face. Four thousand? Why, that was exactly the amount he——

The thought was not even finished in his mind. He saw that the eyes read guilt in his own. By an almost superhuman effort he broke the hypnotic spell of the dreaded gaze and looked hurriedly about him for help. He tried to cry out, but his throat was dry. Then his hand shifted nervously behind him for his revolver.

"None o' that! None o' that!" cried his captor, warningly. "I've got my eyes on ye, and I've got his eyes in my head, and I kin see with 'em, too. I kin see you're guilty—guilty o' stealing four thousand o' Jim's good money. I want that four thousand ye got."

Jose, blanched and terror-stricken, made a gesture of denial.

"No use o' denyin' it," resumed his Nemesis, coldly and sternly, "for I warn't in Virginny for nothin'. I yeard o' you thar. I was in that drift as well as yourself. Ye left a wide-open trail. Ye don't think I been follerin' ye for nothin', do ye? Ye don't think I've been keepin' my eyes—Jim's eyes—on ye to let ye git away from me now? Come outside and give me that money. Come on, now!"

With his face toward Jose he opened the door and stalked out. And Jose, powerless to resist, followed him into the night.

* * * * * * *

Richardson, the mine superintendent, and Thompson, the San Francisco stockbroker, sat talking over their coffee and cigars in Virginia's best restaurant.

"You say he saw the whole thing?"

"Yes."

"Well, it certainly is a remarkable story. When did he return?"

"Yesterday, I believe."

"Of whom are you speaking, Richardson?" some one asked from an adjoining table.

"Why, Jim Sanders, that fellow who went into a trance three or four months ago, and so narrowly escaped being buried alive."—Argonaut.

One of Millions.

Once upon a time there lived a man who wanted only a few things that everybody wants, says the New York Commercial Advertiser. He wanted plenty to eat and drink, leisure and the woman he loved. But he found that to have time to himself to make it possible to live pleasantly with his sweetheart and give her all he wanted, and to take care of the children that they might have—to do all this he must have a great deal of money. So he went to work and built up a great business, a very complicated machinery. To this money-producing machinery he was forced to give most of his energy. It gave him no time for leisure, no energy for enjoying the sunshine, his wife and children. But he began to enjoy the machinery of his business.

When he had made a large fortune the only thing he enjoyed was the machinery by which he could make more money. He had lost his interest in the things for which he began his business. Perhaps he still had interest in food, his wife and all the naive physical and sentimental pleasures, but it was a blunted, dull interest. The only live interest he had was his business.

A New Story of Harcourt.

Not many years ago Sir William Harcourt visited a man-of-war lying off the Hampshire coast. After dinner the weather became rather rough, so the captain—a small, dapper man—suggested that Sir William should sleep on board, and surrendered his own berth for the night to the ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer. Next morning the captain's sailor-servant, who knew nothing of this change of quarters, brought a cup of coffee to the cabin door, and knocked once or twice without receiving any answer. Somewhat alarmed, he entered and asked, anxiously, "Don't you want your coffee this morning, sir?"

The only reply was a growl, and the terrified sailor saw a gigantic figure turn over under the bed-clothes.

Dropping the coffee, he rushed to the ship's surgeon, exclaiming: "For goodness sake, sir, come to the captain. He's speechless, and swollen to ten times his natural size!"

The Phoenix.

The Phoenix was the name of the first fire company in England, and it was established in 1682. At that time, in the towns, squirts or syringes were used for extinguishing fire, and their length did not exceed two or three feet, with pipes of leather. Watertight seamless hose was first made in Bethnal Green in 1720.

An Attraction at the Paris Exposition

One of the new things to be shown at Paris next year is a model Vesuvius, 330 feet high and 495 feet in diameter, built of iron, steel, cement and turf. A spiral path bordered with cafes will wind up the volcano. Inside is to be represented Dante's heaven and hell.

One of the first persons to call on a newly married man is a piano agent. When love is still young, all sorts of agents fasten upon a man, believing that he will be soft and pliable as putty in their hands.

WAS A FAMOUS FRAUD

REMARKABLE AND MONUMENTAL SWINDLING SCHEME.

The Principal Tells How He Forged Records that Deceived Eminent Lawyers, Enlisted Millionaires, and Cost Uncle Sam the Sum of $250,000.

One of the most remarkable land cases in the history of the country and possibly of the world was that of James Reavis, who laid claim to 12,500,000 acres of land in Arizona and New Mexico under what is called the "Peralta grant" and who recently confessed himself a fraud and his title a myth. It cost the United States $250,000 to defeat Reavis and secure his imprisonment in a New Mexican penitentiary for two years. In the meantime the influential friends of Reavis had spent $750,000 in his behalf, and honestly insisted that his claim was just.

The Peralta land claim story reads like a romance. It was founded solely on the mythical lineage of a Mexican girl whom Reavis married. In a word, he forged so skillfully that this woman from Mexican mountains was herself convinced that she was an heiress—she believed the story he told her. She swore that she was the granddaughter of Baron Miguel Peralta de la Cordova, of Spain, who went to Mexico in 1730 as a crown commissioner, and in recognition of his services King Philip V. in 1742 gave him the grant of this great tract of 12,500,000 acres, which to-day lies in Arizona and New Mexico and contains some flourishing towns and is worth $100,000,000.

JAMES ADDISON REAVIS.

Suit was formally entered in the United States Court of Claims. Eminent counsel offered their services to Reavis on a contingent fee. The government sent searchers to Spain. Crocker, Mackay, Huntington, all lent Reavis money to fight what they regarded as a just claim. Conkling, Cockran and Ingersoll agreed to serve as counsel. Ed Stokes let the man and his wife run up a $10,000 board bill at the Hoffman House. Confiding merchants added clothes, horses and carriages, jewels. Strangest of all, there arose all over the country 160 other claimants, all Peraltas and all descendants of the original baron. Yet the baron's descendants were only the creatures of Reavis' brain.

It was after the civil war that Reavis conceived his conspiracy. He was 35 years old. He had forged a little—a pass in the army, a title deed to some land, a note—and hadn't been found out. So when a Dr. George M. Willing told him of a great tract of land in Arizona and New Mexico to which he bore a clouded title he decided to look into it. Dr. Willing had claimed the title, and at his death his wife wanted to look it up. She asked Reavis, who had been dabbling in real estate in St. Louis, to take charge of it. But it was worthless. Reavis then made up his mind to find someone else to whom the title could be ascribed. He found her in an unknown Mexican girl. No one knew the history of her birth. From a baby she had Indian children for playmates. A ranchero's family raised her and sold her into bondage.

Reavis took this beautiful child to San Francisco, and John W. Mackay was so impressed with his story that he allowed him $500 a month with which to go to Spain to prosecute his search for evidence. So Reavis went, posing as a newspaper correspondent, eager to write accounts of Spanish curiosities, so dear to the American people, then friendly to Spain. Reavis found that the Peralta family was extinct—just the thing to further his schemes!

In a curio shop Reavis got a valuable link in the chain of evidence—two old ivory miniatures of a husband and wife. His practiced eye told him that they had been painted in the eighteenth century. They were just what he needed.

"On these as a foundation," says this strange man, "I built the mythical structure which all but stood against the efforts of the government and the vast expenditures of money to tear it down!"

Reavis came back and married the beautiful Mexican and told her that the miniatures were those of her great-grandmother. Then pushing aside all the forgeries prepared to back up the Willing claim, Reavis started in anew. He traced the lineage of the Peraltas. He found it to be an old family. The name meant a "high pear," from the Spanish "pera," pear, and "alta," high. The family became a titled one when a dukedom was conferred upon Enrique Carrillo several hundred years ago. The last one was Baron Miguel.

Now for a mythical hero, the grandfather of the Mexican girl! This was easy. Reavis selected another extinct Spanish family named Silva, married it by forged archives to the last of the genuine Peraltas, who in reality had never married, and the mythical Silva Peralta was born to the genuine Baron Miguel Peralta de la Cordova, who never had a son.

"I made the records show," says Reavis, "that the second Baron had to abandon Sonora, Mexico, because of the French invasion, and set out for Spain, the home of his ancestors, in 1858, by way of Los Angeles and San Francisco. In 1822 he had married—I doctored the records all right—and to him a daughter had been born who married Don Jose Ramon Carmen Masol y Castillo, Sept. 20, 1858. With his daughter and her husband he set out for Spain."

It was perfectly planned. The records told enough of the story to give it foundation. He was too wise to tell too much, as it might have been more easily disproved. Floods overtook the family at a crossing of the Santa Anna River, near San Bernardino, Cal., where twins were born to the young mother, a boy and a girl. Mother and boy died, and were buried there in one coffin. The father proceeded, taking the girl with him.

This was the mythical lineage Reavis built for his beautiful bride. She was to be the girl who survived. And it had a wonderful verisimilitude to the truth. There had been the floods, there had been the Spanish nobleman with his family, there had been twins, born, there had been the deaths, and the father had gone on with his little girl. A settler had told Reavis a true tale of years gone by. It was easy to convince the settler that they were the Peraltas, which they were not.

There were the church records, too. Mexican scribes did the work for him. Reavis did the ageing of the records. It was easy to slip them between the original archives from which they could not be distinguished. It was easy to change ancient church records.

The Spanish archives bore out everything that Reavis claimed. His wife now took the title of Baroness of Arizona, and called the tract "La Baronia de Arizonia." Certified copies came over from Spain, true transcriptions of the archives. But the archives were forgeries.

"They were literally glued together with age," wrote the searchers, in their simple Castilian way.

So they were. Reavis had glued them months before. So the case was docketed on the calendar of the United States Court of Claims, and the learned judges took up consideration of what came to be known as the "great Peralta claim."

And only a bit of chance brought the whole cunningly devised structure to the ground. A United States official was searching in Madrid on an entirely different matter. By chance he came across one of the documents—the original deed to Don Miguel. It was a forgery. Other discoveries bearing on the bogus claim came fast and in a twinkling all was changed. The eminent counsel withdrew. The California millionaires abandoned Reavis and he was arrested. The government spent $45,000 more to convict him of misdemeanor. He was sentenced to two years in the prison of New Mexico, and has just been released. And now he has made a full confession of the attempted fraud.

Conversing at Long Range.

An inquiry made some time ago as to the greatest distance at which a man's voice could be heard, leaving, of course, the telephone out of consideration, brought out some rather curious facts. It was ascertained, for instance, that eighteen miles is the longest distance on record at which a man's voice has been heard. This occurred in the Grand Canon of the Colorado, where one man shouting the name "Bob" at one end, his voice was plainly heard at the other end, which is eighteen miles away. Lieutenant Foster, on Parry's third Arctic expedition, found that he could converse with a man across the harbor of Port Bowen, a distance of 6,696 feet, or about a mile and a quarter; and Sir John Franklin said that he conversed with ease at a distance of ten miles.

HAS A PRIVATE BALL PARK.

Base-Ball "Fan" Has a Novel Way of Entertaining Friends.

Julius Fleischmann, of Cincinnati, New York, Europe and several other places, has clinched his claim of being the greatest base-ball "fan" in the world by maintaining a team and park of his own, in which games are played for the amusement of himself and friends. Mr. Fleischmann has a great racing stable, crack yachts and other means of enjoyment, but it is in his baseball outfit hat he takes the most pleasure and pride.

Mr. Fleischmann owns a summer home in the Catskill Mountains, near Griffin's Corners, and it is there he has made his private base-ball park. The ground had to be virtually cut out of the side of the mountain. People acquainted with the topography of the district don't need to be told that the finding of a level spot large enough for a ball park is a rather serious undertaking in the Catskill country. Mr. Fleischmann looked about, and finally found a four-acre tract that did not have more than a dozen hills and valleys on it, and purchased it. Many thousands of dollars were spent in leveling this ground and blasting the bowlders, so that in the summer of 1895 the team had a real ball ground to play upon. Further improvements have been made, and now the dirt diamond is as smooth as a billiard table, and the rest of the field is covered with a lawn level and perfect for the game. This ground is inclosed by a high wire fence, with thousands of loopholes for the village youth to peep through, and the grand stand, with comfortable seats, accommodates 500 persons. And when a game is on this grand stand is crowed with men and smiling summer girls all in the gayest of summer gowns.

Players who come to try their skill against the Mountain Athletic Base-ball Club, as Fleischmann's team is known, find luxury awaiting them under the grand stand, for Mr. Fleischmann has fitted the three dressing-rooms with plunge and shower baths, and a man in attendance looks after the comfort of the men. Do not doubt that the members of the Mountain Athletic Base-ball Club get plenty of enjoyment out of their season's work, in addition to the salaries they draw and the comfortable living Mr. Fleischmann purchases for them at a summer hotel.

STRETCHING A PIANIST'S HAND.

Device that Widens the Span of the Musician's Fingers.

The achievements of the piano student are often limited by the size of the hand, and one with a small span is severely encumbered. A music teacher recognizing that this shortcoming was present in many persons, has undertaken a scheme for stretching the hand just as one would stretch a glove. He is Frederic L. Crane of Malden, Mass., and he has recently patented the device by which he means to do this. This device consists of a long rod threaded for its entire length. At one end is a block, firmly fastened with a "finger rest" made of braid or some similar material fastened to it. Another block, similarly provided, is movable along the threaded rod, and after the fingers have been inserted in the rest they may be drawn apart and held in this position any length of time by the separation of the block, which is accomplished by turning a handle mounted on the rod.

STORIES OF THE SPANISH WAR

"The newspaper correspondents, with cameras in their hats and pencils sticking out of their pockets like quills on a porcupine, didn't get hold of everything that happened in the late war," remarked the lieutenant. "There was the time the Spanish fooled the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh volunteers, for instance."

"How was it, lieutenant?" asked somebody.

"Why, it was the sharpest trick you ever heard of, and simple as A B C. You know, the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh is made up of men from New York City—all heroes, of course, but still they are accustomed to the civil walks of life. And the civil walks of life, taken literally, nowadays, are peculiar paths. It was at San Juan. The regiment had been ordered to advance and lie down close among some low bushes. The Spaniards were only a short distance in front. The firing had ceased in that neighborhood and all was still. Our men were in a state of intense though suppressed excitement. You could never guess what those crafty Spaniards did. Suddenly they rang a bicycle bell, and followed it with a cable car gong. The Hundred and Twenty-seventh jumped into the air as one man. The Spaniards blazed away and tried to take 'em on the wing. Of course, they didn't hit a thing, because Spaniards never do; but if they had been good shots they might have bagged the whole regiment. And I would not be surprised if they'd had an elevated road guard to yell 'Step lively!' that they could have stampeded every last man."—Harper's Bazar.

Now that the volunteers are back, the opportunities for obtaining at first hand a knowledge of the real horrors of war are perceptibly increased. Two Chicago boys who were together at Santiago, growing reminiscent disclosed a fearful fact yesterday.

"I have often wondered," said one, "and now that we are back home, I want to know why you reported for sick call about four days out of every week and yet never seemed any more sick than I was?"

"Why, if you were only foxy you'd have been wise like the rest of us. One doctor was a homeopathist and, no matter what kind of pills he gave out, they were all sugar-coated and they made the best sweetening for coffee that ever happened."—Chicago News.

A veteran of the war of the rebellion was telling some of his experiences to a civilian, and he was dwelling upon the terrific courage of the captain of his company, and also his profanity. In those days profane officers were much more common than they now are, and they were especially noticeable among the volunteer troops. The captain referred to was notorious in two armies for his command of profane language, and he never entirely recovered from it, though his admission to the regular army at the close of the war moderater his manner somewhat.

"It meant death to every man of us," said the veteran, speaking of a proposed charge on a line of breastworks before Richmond, "if we went in there, and we knew it, but there wasn't anything else to do, unless we got different orders. There had been a mistake in ordering us to take the works until some re-enforcements had come up, but that wasn't any of our business."

"Well, now," demurred the civilian, "I don't look at it that way. It ought to have been your business not to have fought when you knew you were going to be whipped."

"If we had put up any sort of a bluff like that," you bet our captain would have got one of his swearing spells on, and then the dickens would have been to pay. He just never would have got done cussing us for being cowards."

"Do you mean to say your company would have gone in and been killed rather than to stand the captain's swearing?"

"That's what."

"Well, I wouldn't."

"Oh, but you never heard the captain cuss."—Washington Star.

A story is being told which serves to illustrate the American characteristic of giving slight heed to rank and place as against efficiency and daring and supreme achievement.

The story has to do with Mr. McKinley, and it relates that while visiting one of the camps during his recent Southern tour he chanced to be strolling about unattended and sought to pass a certain line which was patrolled by a vigilant sentinel.

The sentinel promptly stopped him and demanded the countersign.

"I don't know the countersign," said Mr. McKinley.

"Then you don't pass," said the soldier.

"But," said Mr. McKinley, "I am the President of the United States!"

"I don't know about that," replied the imperturbable sentry; "but if you have not got the countersign you could not get by here even if you were George Dewey himself!"

Protest Against a Sunday Law.

There is a law against working on Sunday in Bavaria, but the paper mills are protesting on the ground that their supply of water power is so uncertain that they are compelled to make use of it whenever they can, and that by not taking advantage of a strong current, occurring on Sunday, they are apt to lose a great deal of time. The authorities are considering the suspension of the law regarding paper mills.

Means in 1891, and to this Union were born two children, both of whom with the mother survive him.

While in early manhood he united with the M. E. church at Collingwood and has since been a faithful worker. His last words were with his God. He was a kind and loving husband and father. Mr. Briningstall leaves to mourn his death a wife, two children, a father, mother, three brothers, two children and many friends.

Shot by the Marshal

A man named Reffel was shot by Marshal at Garrett this morning, and seriously, perhaps fatally wounded. It seems that Reffel had stolen a lot of hides from J. A. Ketring a merchant at Syracuse and had come to Garrett to dispose of them. Word came from Ketring to arrest him. The Marshal did this, when Reffel denied the stealing and said he was dealing in hides, and asked the marshal to go with him and see his stock. They started out. when Reffel ran off, the marshal after him. As Reffel refused to stop when ordered, and was likely to escape the officer fired and his man fell. At latest reports he was yet alive.

For Good Government.

The Good Citizenship League held a very interesting meeting at the Presbyterian church last evening. The music was fine and appropriate for the occasion. The anthem by the Lutheran choir, the duet by Mrs. Cuppy and Ed Baxter, and the solo by Mrs. Stacy were all fully appreciated. The address by Judge Roby was excellent and full of good thoughts that it would be well for the good people of Auburn to digest. Among them was the mistake that is made sometimes of vilifying the saloon keeper when it is the traffic itself that is to be attacked and abolished.

He also called attention to the encouraging things that had taken place in our county and town in the last few months in regard to the election of good and sober men to fill the several offices and said that the good citizens had demonstrated beyond a doubt that united, they could accomplish much for good government. The address was carefully prepared, and gave forth no uncertain sound as to the sentiments of the author. He was followed by J. E. Pomeroy, who gave in a concise form the laws in force at the present time for the regulation of the saloon business. This was of great interest to those present, enlarging their knowledge of the laws we already have on our statute books for the protection of the citizen against these evil influences

J. W. Baxter followed in a short talk, calling attention to the necessity of further and better legislature in regard to the traffic. A fair sized audience was present and the next monthly meeting will be held in the Lutheran church on the last Monday evening of June.

COURT NOTES

Work before the Judge alone, began Monday on the injunction case of Dove vs Carnahan. Rose & Rose were attorneys for plaintiff and Judge Roby for defendant.

It appears that when Samuel Carnahan died some years ago, he left for his widow, a life interest of the entire farm, which was however to go to the heirs after her death. It appears that lately, Mrs. Carnahan finds herself in need of more money than is produced by the farm proper, as there are heavy ditch taxes to meet and also interest on borrowed money. She claims that to meet these expenses, it was necessary to sell some timber. The timber has been cut and measured, but before it could be hauled off, two of the heirs, Mrs. John Dove and Mrs. Jacob Powell, objected to having any timber taken off the land, as we understand they feel an especial interest in the part of the farm where timber is being taken. A temporary injunction stopped the work till it could be fully heard to see whether the injunction should be made permanent, or whether Mrs. Carnahan could go on and sell it. The trial ended Monday evening and Judge Harcman took till this morning to decide.

Today, Wednesday, comes up a case for the jury. Anderson vs Lake Shore road. It is to recover damages for loss of stock shipped.

Decoration Day

The weather clerk was kind yesterday, and we had fine weather. So the attendance was large and the enjoyment as great accordingly, The first part of the sevices was in the Opera House as already stated in the COURIER These were merely formal, and were interspersed with excellent music. Mr. Guild's address was of a high order both as to delivery and sentiment. It was broad and statesman like and full of the patriotic fire of a Christian, American citizen. He was heartily cheered at all his points. At its conclusion the audience adjourned to the street, where the procession was formed as already given, except that the artillery company was not in line. But they were already on duty, firing salutes at the cemetery as the procession started off. The band made a nice leader for the hundreds who followed Company K. looked natural and bright, and proud, as they have a right to be, and were in contrast to the staid veterans of '61 who followed them. The latter had 49 in line, and many others who did not care to take the long walk, watched them with a gaze of affection. from the sidewalk. The W. R. C. came next, though in smaller numbers, and a large wagon was thoughtfully provided for the convenience of a few who could not march to the cemetery. Then came a hundred or so of sweet little girls led by Mrs. C. C. Shaffer, and as many lads led by J. L. Marvin. It was an inspiring sight. At the cemetery were the usual ceremonies including the salute given by the artillery. Then the march up town concluded the ceremonies.

BUTLER.

But few people of our county are aware that within its borders there exists a veritable wonder land a museum well worth seeing. Simon Haines, of Sedan is its owner, sole manager, and, artist. The attention of the person passing by is attracted by a neat cottage in a cluster of thickly set shade trees, enclosed by a curious little fence. A close inspection of the grounds disclose many strange and curious birds, reptiles, and great snakes, with mouths extended, tongues darting and unless prepared for the surprise, one would surely be frightened. The grounds are laid out in little squares of about ten feet, on each corner is a vigorous young maple tree. The little squares are set with beautiful flowers, and as we stroll about our feet are often beset by some great green frog, specked fish or black coiled serpent. We enter the cottage and our surprise hardly know its bounds. Seated in one corner is the figure of a Spaniard whe has just been dealt his death blow. A bullet has pierced his face, from which blood is oozing, at his feet a serpent and a fish striving for masterly. In an adjoining room three young ladies dressed out in robes of cotton with faces beaming with surprise oi pleasure greet you, seated near them is a great big negro. a German and an irishman, while over head birds and insects riot in profusion. All are made by the hand of the modest artist from wood, and it is doubtful if another such a collection could be found between Maine, and California. Readers when you have opportunity visit this fairy land and encourage the artist in his strange passion for curious things carved from wood.

The County Council.

Judge Hartman has been studying over the names of good men over the county, to select the seven men for the county council, as well as the forty-two for the township boards. We hope to see the men chosen, accept as far as they can no matter whether they like the law or not. For our own part we have no very high opinion of it. But it is the duty of every good citizen to obey all the laws whether he likes them or not. And it is the duty of all, to do what can be done to give any new law a fair trial. This is especially necessary in this case. This law is the result of a widespread belief that there had been mismanagement in some townships and some counties, and that there must be a change. Whether the change made is a wise one is yet to be proved. Let us give it a fair trial, and if it succeeds, we shall have cause to be grateful. If it fails we can repeal it when the next legislature meets. But we cannot know whether it is a good law or not unless we give it a fair trial. Let us do that. We know that some of those chosen will say the salary is too small. We think it is too. But it will not be more than a year or or so, till we know whether it is a failure or not and we can stand it that long.

Wholesome Water.

A sample of water taken at random from a tap in one of the water mains at Auburn, by Dr. F. M. Hines, was sent to Dr. Hurty, secretary of the State Board of Health, for analysis, to see if it is suitable and healthful for drinking purposes. A few days ago the following reply was received.

DR. F. M. HINES,
Auburn. Ind.

Dear Doctor:—The sample of water which you sent to us collected from a tap has been analyzed chemically and bacteriologically. On both scores we can find no objection to the sample. The chemical ingredients denoting pollution are very low indeed, and no bacteria other than the harmless water forms were found. So far then as this one analysis is concerned, we pronounce this a potable water.

Very truly yours,
J. H. HURTY, Secretary.

The Tea Habit.

A man in New York City was recently prostrated by some strange trouble, something like a collapse of the nervous system. Physicians are unable to explain his disease, but have come to the conclusion that in some way it is the result of over indulgence in tea drinking, He had been in the habit of taking thirty cups of tea a day, and kept this up after he was prostrated. His skin is shrunken and waxlike in appearance, and his blood almost devoid of the life principle that healthful blood contains. His doctors will try stopping his tea habit,

CLUB NOTES

The Reading Club met with Mrs. Maude Robbins last Wednesday, and spent a very pleasant afternoon. After the reading was finished the club enjoyed a fine musical treat. Mrs. Garwood gave several fine numbers on the piano and the hostess, Mrs. Robbins, sang a couple of solos all of which was greatly appreciated by those so fortunate as to be present. The club will meet next Wednesday with Mrs. Will Schaab.

The L. L. C. met with Mrs. Mabel Hodge, and it was no exception to the very enjoyable meetings that have been the rule during this club year.

It was "California Day" and proved to be one of the most interesting and instructive days that the club has enjoyed. Mrs. Wilson gave a charming paper, entitled "The Romance of Early California." She brought out many beautiful and tender thoughts of the early Spanish inhabitants. A fine description of the "Redwood Forest," was given by Mrs. Mabel Hodge, and much valuable information was gained by the club in regard to these wonderful trees, and their uses in the making of beautiful furniture, used by the wealthy people of the world although it is used for such common purposes as siding and shingles by the Californians Miss Nellie Buckley's paper, "A Day on a Stock Farm" was bright and contained some witty personal allusions as to her childish fears of stock running at large. She quoted from an article by Teddy, now Gov. Roosevelt, and the entire paper was very interesting.

Mrs. Lottie Cochran formerly of California was present and very kindly offered to answer any questions that the club might wish to ask, in regard to the state. The conversion that followed elicited much valuable information. Mrs. Sprott, the delegate to the Indiana Union of Literary Clubs gave her report, which was listened to with greatest attention. It was nicely arranged and gave all the points that the members wished to know. Among other facts elicited was the one that as far as could be ascertained, there were only three other clubs in the state older than the L. L. C. of Auburn. After current events the club adjourned to meet with Mrs. Zimmerman next Saturday. Mrs. Hodge at this point asked the ladies to remain for a short time, and at once began to serve very delicious refreshments consisting of ice cream. cake and strawberries. She was assisted by Miss Helen Hodge, and her own little son Master Paul. It was a delightful sensation to all present to be served so quietly and gracefully by a little four year old. The club was pleased to have present as a visitor, Mrs. Harry Swarts of Clinton, Ill., who is a member of a woman's club at her own home.

Saturday, May 27, the Auburn Culture Club met with Mrs. Sophia Hebel. Meeting was called to order by the president. After the business the lesson in English Literature beginning with the age of Elizabeth, was led by Mrs. Julia Shaffer. The special characters of the lesson as William Tyndale Miles Coverdale, Roger Ascham, John Fox, Henry Howard and Sir Thomas Wyatt, were brought out by different members of the class.

The club is reading Maurine divided into three lessons. After current events the club adjourned to meet in one week with Mrs. VanAuken where it is desired that each member of the class be present.

INQUISITORIAL

Methods of Collecting Taxes Instituted by an Official of San Francisco.

They are going to collect the tax, the whole tax, and nothing less than the tax out in California. It seems that there have resided in the city of ups and downs many of that ubiquitous class of citizens who believe it cheaper to lie than to pay taxes. Salaries, it is rumored, were falling behind; his honor needed cuspidors in his office. The methods adopted by the new assessor, elected on a reform platform of his own making, whose name, curiously enough, is Dodge, savors pungently of the ancient inquisition. The way the thing has been done in most cities is for the deputy collector to call and leave a blank. This receiving no attention beyond a few minor items, such as "Steinway piano, twenty-five dolls;" "household goods, furniture, chattels, etc., one hundred dolls.," the deputy humbly pockets what he knows to be a lie and goes his way; the result being that the very signer of such a libel is obliged for another year to stumble over the pavements he has since childhood decried, and stand up for more months in the street cars, whose overloaded condition he has in print so violently execrated. These unmethods are declared by Dodge archaic. The new way is to force one's way into a house and estimate the value of the goods from the standpoint of an outsider. The procedure is naturally meeting with much opposition, even by those who voted for reform and Mr. Dodge. The latter gentleman, however, is seemingly careless of a re-election and pursues the even tenor of his way all undisturbed. The constitutionality of the case is being contested in the San Francisco courts.

FACTS ABOUT THE PHILIPPINES.

THE Philippines are essentially heterogenous. Some of the islands are mountainous, and others are flat; some are muddy, swampy, and feverish, others are porous limestone, well-drained and healthy; some are entirely wooded, some are entirely bare.

The inhabitants present like divergence. The Moros of the south are warlike, active, intelligent, with a civilization as advanced as Turkey's. The Negritos are a diseased and dying pigmy tribe, absolutely animal in their existence, less advanced than any known people. The term "Filipino" embraces Manila rabble and secluded islanders, mountaineers and seamen, priests and the cannibals. It is necessary, therefore, to use only the broadest terms in describing the group collectively.

The archipelago is a group of 1,200 islands situated in the Pacific Ocean, extending from latitude 21 degrees north to 4 degrees 45 minutes north. Its length is thus about 1,000 miles; its greatest width is 640 miles; the total land area, aproximately, 115,000 square miles. The nearest mainland is Asia, 300 miles to the northeast. San Francisco is 8,000 miles to the west. The archipelago lies wholly within the line of Capricorn and the equator. Its characteristics, food products, and people are tropical.

The climate is hot and moist; regular observations have been taken only at Manila, where the temperature has been found to vary between 60 and 100 degrees. The excessive humidity makes this degree more difficult to endure than in the temperate zones. As one progresses toward the swampy, low-lying islands farther south the heat, and especially the humidity, increases greatly.

There are two seasons, the wet and dry—the former lasting from June to November—being the most disagreeable and dangerous to health. Fever and dysentery are the diseases most dreaded by foreigners, but dangerous localities are known and may be avoided.

The Philippines are the seat of nature's passions. Earthquakes are common and violent; the volcanoes are the most dangerous in the world. Luzon is the cradle of that terrible sea storm, the typhoon.

Islands' External History.

On Aug. 10, 1519, there started from Spain with a fleet of five ships Fernando Magellan, a Portuguese navigator. His object was to discover a passage from Europe, west to the Pacific. Magellan had vainly endeavored to interest the King of Portugal in his project; had become a naturalized Spaniard, and had obtained from Charles I., of Spain the wherewithal to equip his fleet.

He reached the western coast of South America in December and turned south. As the season became harsher and the weather colder the ships' commanders mutined, desiring to winter on shore. One was executed, another marooned. However, one ship did desert and another was wrecked. With three ships the great explorer continued south, and on Oct. 28, 1520, passed through the Straits of Magellan to the waters of the Pacific. He now shaped his course west by north, and in midsummer, 1521, reached Mindanao, of which he took possession in the name of the King of Spain. He next landed at Cebu, in August, 1521, and was welcomed by the king of the island. This monarch was baptized and took the oath of allegiance to Spain. Shortly after Magellan became involved in a factional quarrel between two native chieftains and was killed. Many members of the expedition had died, but the remainder, with two ships, again sailed west and discovered Palawan. Later one of the two was lost, but the other pluckily continued its way and made the first complete journey around the world.

In 1565, under the direction of Philip II., the second Spanish expedition reached the islands. The object was the saving of native souls; inquisition methods were employed, and conversions, though not valuable, were numerous. In 1571 Manila was seized and proclaimed the capital of the islands, to be called henceforth the Islas Filipinos, in honor of King Philip.

The Chinese Emperor resented the intrusion into celestial domains. Between 1573 and 1575 he sent forth ten expeditions to oust, the Spaniards. Severe battles followed, but the Europeans managed to keep their foothold. They never, however, forgave the Chinese these attempts. At various times fits of resentment against Chinese blood would sweep over the Spaniards and crusades were organized in order to kill or drive them out. In 1603 23,000 were murdered, and in 1639 35,000. In 1762 England took Manila from Spain, but peace was soon proclaimed, and the islands were returned.

The natives have been apt to revolt at any time. When they did so Spain used fire and sword liberally, not only to subdue, but to punish after surrender.

Resources of the Islands.

The resources of the islands are varied. Rice was introduced from China centuries ago. It has since become the staple food of the natives on account of the ease with which it is produced. The quality is excellent. At present all the rice produced is consumed in the islands, but much good land is not cultivated.

Sugar cane is grown extensively throughout the archipelago. Of late years beet sugar has cut into the profits of this business, but with the removal of the various Spanish export taxes, with the supersedence of buffalo power by steam, and with the opening up of the back country by railroads, or at least highroads, the Philippine plantations will reduce the present Havemeyer prices.

Abaca, or hemp, is grown widely. The gathering of abaca is an operation necessitating considerable care and conscientiousness. The natives possess neither of these qualifications, and, employing primitive methods, ruin the finer fiber of the plant. Observers say that machinery capable of preserving these delicate fibers is feasible. In that case abaca could be used for garments, napkins, sheets, and even handkerchiefs. At present the hemp is used chiefly for rails, doormats, and rope. The Philippines will probably retain a practical monopoly of this crop; its cultivation has been attempted in many other places, but never successfully except in the extreme northern part of Borneo.

COMPREHENSIVE MAP OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Native tobacco has always been indigenous to Luzon, but the quality is strong and bitter. Early in the seventeenth century missionaries introduced the Mexican plant with great success. Tobacco plantations multiplied; the business became more and more prosperous until in 1781 it was made a state monopoly. Laws were enacted that all sales should be to the government. A planter might not smoke a cigar of his own make under penalty of $7 fine. The government was not always prompt to pay for goods received; natives refused to cultivate their land and fled to the mountains; soldiers followed and killed whom they found; at night the natives returned again and fired the crops in the field. In this way Mindoro's once flourishing business has been annihilated. Spain now took another step; not only must all tobacco raised be sold to the state buyers (on credit), but every family should own and care for at least 4,000 tobacco plants. The abuses resulting from this last statute became so horrible that even Spanish officials protested to the home government; the Castilian statesmen, realizing the sponge was squeezed dry, repealed the monopoly laws in 1882. Even under such auspices the tobacco remained excellent. Since the business has been open it has increased tremendously. Manila numbers scores of factories—native, Chinese, and Spanish; several of them have over 500 operatives.

Coffee is grown to a considerable extent; the quality is unusually good. Little, however, finds its way out of the archipelago. The cocoa plant was introduced from Central America early in the seventeenth century. Philippine chocolate is always spoken of well by returned travelers.

Various minerals are found in paying quantities. Especially is this true of Luzon and Mindanao. Gold and sulphur will prove of value to prospectors; silver, mercury, copper and tin have furnished returns, but the extent of the deposits is a matter of investigation.

On many islands the ax has never been raised against the immense virgin forests; in few have its depredations been extensive. Over a hundred different varieties of wood have been classified. Among them we find teak; naga, resembling mahogany; tipolo, for musical instruments; lanitan, for guitars and violins; boxwood, ebony and bamboo.

The Inhabitants.

The inhabitants of these islands are a strangely mixed lot. Malay characteristics generally prevail throughont. The many attempts to classify the peoples into various district tribes and races have failed, for the reason that pure blood of any sort is rare.

It is safest to divide the native Filipinos into Christianized Malays, pagan Malays, and Mohammedan Malays. The first named comprise five and a half millions of the total population of eight millions. They resemble our negroes in many ways. They are music lovers, fond of the sunshine, superstitious. Though usually good-natured, they are subject to fits of murderous passion. Nature in the tropics is so industrious that man need not assist her to any great extent in order to live comfortably. The Filipino will not work as long as he is not about to starve. When he has made enough to live on for a month or two the ex-laborer retires to his thatched hut, smokes his cigarettes, fights his gamecock, strums his guitar, and sings love songs to his wife or sweetheart.

The natives of the northern islands are called Tagalos. They are the smallest and least brave, but also most treacherous and tricky of the Filipinos, and always have been reckoned as the poorest fighters; have always been most completely under Spain's domination, and have suffered most accordingly.

The central group of islands is termed the Visaya group. The inhabitants—called Visayos—are somewhat larger, stronger, more independent than the Tagalos. The difference, however, is far less marked than between our different Indian tribes. Travelers, in order to strengthen the force of their distinctions and comparisons, are apt to push them a little far. The sharply drawn distinction between the Tagalos and the Visayoss is not justified.

The Moros or Mohammedan Malays aggregate less than a million. They inhabit the Sulu group at the south of the archipelago, parts of Mindanao, and the southern third of Palawan. One Sultan, whose residence is Sulu, is acknowledged throughout these islands. The Moros are a fierce, fanatical, seafaring race, who were never conquered by Spain. It is unsafe for a white man to venture among them. To kill Christians is part of their religious belief.

The aborigines of the islands are the Negritos, a puny, miserable, dwarf race. As the Malays swept up through the archipelago the Negritos were driven into the most remote and uncovered parts. Though not of true negro stock, they are much blacker than the Malays, and their inteligence is far lower. The total number is estimated at 50,000.

Island of Luzon.

Luzon is the largest, most populous, most developed, and most civilized of the Philippines. It has an area of 42,000 square miles, or over one-third the whole area of the archipelago, about five-eighths of the whole population, the only railroad, and the only factories. It is the seat of the capital, and it contains fifty times as many foreigners as all the rest of the islands put together. Luzon is supposed to support 5,000,000 inhabitants. Of these, 80 per cent. are civilized to a certain extent.

In development, Luzon, though the most advanced of the Philippines, is disgracefully backward. There is one little, badly managed railroad, 120 miles in length. The highroads, twenty miles inland, are either lacking altogether or are merely trails. There are no flat-bottomed steamers on the larger rivers, though they could do a thriving business. The sugar mills are operated by buffalo power. In consequence, partially exhausted sugar land near Manila, or other ports, brings over $100 an acre, while further back in the country land a third more fertile brings $30.

Manila sprawls over a good deal of ground, being built up on both sides of the River Pasig, and including rice fields and other submarine territory. Its population is about 300,000, which is small considering its area, but large considering its opportunities. Of this number two-thirds are natives, 30,000 Chinese, 50,000 Chinese half-breeds, 15,000 Spanish half-breeds, and 5,000 Spanish. Previous to the war the Americans and English together numbered 400. Contrary to general belief, the city is neither pretty nor unhealthy. Earthquakes cause houses to be constructed broad and squat, with tin roofs. This prevents beauty, and it must be said in the Spaniards' favor that it is excellently well drained, which pervents ill health. In 1893 electric light was substituted for oil, and in the same year an American fire engine was brought over. Fires are common, and a blaze started in a native shack spreads fast. Manila's chief interest lies in its commerce. It is the tollgate of the Philippines.

The Smaller Islands.

Of the 1,200 islands which constitute the Philippine archipelago the number inhabited is between 35 and 50 per cent. The smaller islands resemble in physical characteristics and inhabitants the larger islands to which they are nearest. Occasionally an entire island belongs to a single planter, and usually in such case it is a land of milk and honey for the natives. The padrone is of necessity kindly, else he would most infallibly disappear. There is plenty to eat, and not too much to do. The padrone's lot is easy, too. He merely has to sit on his own veranda and allow the Philippine soil to make him rich.

TRUCK HANDLE FOR BARRELS.

Tonglike Device for Lifting and Carrying Bulky Packages.

A barrel is an exceedingly awkward thing to handle, and in establishments where they are moved in large numbers quite a considerable amount of time is lost in placing them on the hand trucks on which they are conveyed and in removing them therefrom. In order to facilitate this loading and unloading a unique truck has been invented by Theodore T. Dickerson, of Trimble, Ala. It consists of the combination with the axle of curved gripping jaws, more like a great pair of plumber's pinchers than anything else. The levers operating the jaws form the handles of the truck. In practice the truck is run up to the barrels and the jaws clamped around the bottom, and then raised, the whole procedure consuming but a few seconds. The two lever arms are held firmly together by a linking clasp, with a spring-pressed ratchet, which is easily released for unshipping the barrel.

A Distant Brother.

A Boston woman had a servant named Norah, a rosy-cheeked girl, who received frequent calls from a young man, of whim she often spoke as "me brother." The consternation of her mistress may be guessed when one day Norah announced that she was soon to marry the stalwart "Tim."

"What do you mean, Norah?" demanded the lady, feeling that a poor trick had been played upon her. "You've always spoken of Tim as your brother to me."

"Yis, ma'am," said the blushing Norah. "I always thought of him so, ma'am, whiles he was making up his mind; but he's been so bowld as to remind me, ma'am, that he's only me brother-in-law's brother, afther all!"—Youth's Companion.

Soldier Blankets.

The blankets issued to the soldiers of our army cost the Government $3.40 each.

A coincidence is the antiquated plea of the plagiarist.

NOTHING TO SPEAK OF.

A Soldier Who Could Not See that a Battle Was Very Exciting.

To have been a brave participator in deeds of daring, without being conscious that there was anything particularly worth noting in the fact, is not the usual attitude of heroes, however modest and self-effacing. A correspondent of Leslie's Weekly, however, discovered such a one in the person of a Rough Rider in the hospital at Camp Walworth. The correspondent was told that the man's experience had been most thrilling, and went to him eager to hear his story. The following dialogue ensued:

"Won't you tell me some of your experiences down in Cuba?" I asked.

He thought a while, then said he didn't recall anything in particular.

"Didn't you lie sixty hours on the firing-line?"

"Guess I did," looking hard at the carpet; "but I don't know as I could say much about it."

"Didn't you hate to see the men die?"

He thought again for a moment. "Why, I felt like it was a lamentable kind o' business—'twasn't nice to see—but there wa'n't nothin' to do. Do you think there was anything to do?"

He looked up anxiously.

"Did you feel afraid?"

"Dunno as I did. Mebbe I did, though, some."

"How about Hamilton Fish? How did you feel when you saw him go down?"

"Dunno as I felt much; guess he's the one that felt. Ye see, gettin' shot's like pushin' a log off a wood-pile—it jest drops. There ain't much to say."

"Wasn't the battle exciting?"

"Naw, not specially; not what I'd call excitin'."

"How about Capron?"

"Nothin' to tell about him, neither; same case as Fish's. It kinder made ye feel mean, o' course, but there ain't no use fussin'. Say, mebbe I could get up some stories for ye ef I studied 'em out, but I ain't got none now on tap."

He was sorroy to disappoint me, but I told him not to worry.

After all, he may be right. Perhaps battles are slow affairs.

MRS. WILLIAM C. WHITNEY.

For Many Years She Was One of Society's Handsomest Leaders.

Mrs. William C. Whitney, who died recently, at the Whitney country home on Long Island, was one of three handsome daughters of Dr. William May, of Baltimore, and was long a social leader. As a girl Edith May visited Germany with her father and there met Capt. Randolph, a dashing officer of the English army. Randolph was married, but fell in love with the beautiful American and went to England for a divorce. He got it. Long before this Dr. May had taken his daughters back to Baltimore, as he did not approve of the English officer's attentions. Capt. Randolph came to this country later, when he was free to marry, and Dr. May gave his consent. The marriage took place. Capt. Randolph was stationed in Canada and there the family lived until his death. Then the widow returned to New York. Her means were modest, but she was popular in society.

Mrs. Whitney remained a widow for some years after the death of her first husband. On Sept. 29, 1896, she was married to William C. Whitney in St. Savior's Church at Bar Harbor, in the presence of a few friends. Mr. Whitney had been a widower then for four years. His first wife and the second Mrs. Whitney had been friends for some years and the families were frequently together. Mrs. Whitney was related to many families well known in New York society, as, for example, the Kanes, Winthrops and Oelrichses.

Mrs. Whitney met in 1898 with the accident which resulted in her death. On Feb. 21 she was riding to one of the hunts at Aiken, S. C. While she was riding under a bridge her head struck a timber. She had frequently ridden under the same bridge without accident. But it happened on this day that she was riding a hunter much larger than the horse she habitually rode. She was knocked off the horse and ever after that time was practically a helpless invalid. She was removed to New York as soon as her condition made it possible. Later she was removed in her husband's yacht to Bar Harbor, and finally was taken to Westbury, L. I. Mrs. Whitney had always been fond of racing, and a special track was laid out for her at Westbury so situated that she could watch the contests on it from a window of her room. Mrs. Whitney had two daughters by her first husband and they survive.

The Mexican War.

The whole number of men in the war with Mexico was 101,282, including regulars and volunteers. The war lasted about two years. Some pretty lively fights were made, notably Resaca de la Palma, Buena Vista and the assaults of Chepultepec and other outworks of the Mexican capital. Yet the casualties were comparatively trifling. Killed in battle, 1,049; died of wounds, 508; total, 1,557. Less by about 100 than the Federal loss at the battle of Chickamauga.

Unmarked Graves.

Eight of the twenty-four Governors of Indiana who have died lie in unmarked graves, and yet in their time they were the marked men of the hour.

Artificial Limbs.

Artificial legs and arms were in use in Egypt as early as B. C. 700. They were made by the priests, who were the physicians of that early time.

Mind and Body.—A virtuous, good and perfect state of mind will force the body into perfect conformation.—Rev. F. E. Mason, Christian Scientist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Soul.—The soul is more susceptible than any material thing, and once injured no earthly power can restore it to health.—Rev. R. L. Gerhart, Lutheran, Bellefonte, Pa.

Results of Christianity.—Civil and religious liberty, which is the foundation stone of our republic, is the result of Christianity.—Dr. Conaty, Roman Catholic, Washington, D. C.

Punishment of Sinners.—There is nothing that Universalism affirms more positively than the inevitable and impartial punishment of sinners.—Rev. I. P. Coddington, Universalist, Rochester, N. Y.

The Church.—The church that fails to obtain a hearing and impress to noble purposes the people about it is a failure, and ought to be reformed or destroyed.—Rev. J. A. B. Wilson, Methodist, San Francisco, Cal.

Speculative Contemplation.— That definition of God which describes him as pure spirit carries in it the danger that we may lose ourselves in speculative contemplation.—Rev. Dr. Behrends, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Anointed Eyes.—It is something like blasphemy to ask God to give to the church the Holy Spirit, which he has already given once and forever. What we want is anointed eyes to see the gift.—Rev. F. J. Van Horn, Boston, Mass.

Christ.—The church will hold Christ as the sovereign authority. All power is given unto him. Authority is not in reason, not in the church, not in the Bible, but in the imperial Christ.—Dr. G. H. Combs, Independent, Kansas City, Mo.

Christian Federation.—It would be glorious to have one Christian federation. Perhaps in the days that are to come such a Christian federation will be made possible. God speed the day. —Rev. Dr. Eaton, Universalist, New York City.

God's Spirit.—If we do not keep our souls filled with God's spirit the devil can enter in and dwell there. We are not concerned merely with overcoming evil habits, but in building up active virtues.—Rev. Dr. Christian, Episcopalian, New York City.

Burdens.—Our ideas of property and economics are burdens imposed on us by the dead. Whitman wanted to live with animals, because "not one of them was afflicted with the mania of owning things."—Rev. B. Fay Mills, Evangelist, Boston, Massachusetts.

Infidelity.—The great Talleyrand committed no error when he told the infidel who asked him why infidelity prevailed so little against the influence of Christ, "Go and be crucified and raise yourself the third day, and you will know why you can not overthrow Christianity."—Rev. A. A. Rice, Los Angeles, Cal.

Evils of Detraction.—Detraction injures the detractor himself, injures the listener, perhaps awakens in its victim—for sooner or later he will hear of it—sentiments of hatred and revenge that will cause him to detract in turn, or drive him even to the crime of murder.—Rev. Father Duboise, Roman Catholic, San Francisco, Cal.

Immortality.—The consciousness of and hunger for immortality are the strongest possible evidences of the fact. The Bible teaches it. The book of Job is a poem of immortality. The Psalms throb with the hope. The prophets are spokesmen of the other world.—Rev. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

MRS. HETTY GREEN IN SOCIETY.

Rents a Cottage at Newport to Introduce Her Daughter.

Mrs. Hetty Green is going into the gay world of society. And it's all on account of her daughter, Miss Sylvia Green, who is now of marriageable age. Mrs. Green has leased a cottage at Newport. The house, which is known as the "Pell cottage," owned by the Walden Pells, now abroad, is situated on Greenough place, near Catherine street, and is partially hidden from the street by trees. The structure has piazzas on three sides and large, airy rooms. The furnishings are somewhat old-fashioned, yet good, and in the parlor are some large mirrors in rich gilt frames. There is considerable ground connected with the place. There is also a small stable in the rear, but it is not at all likely that Mrs. Green will use it, as horses and carriages are tabooed luxuries.

No Long-Distance Wooer.

Rudyard Kipling's maternal grandfather was Rev. George E. Macdonald. It is related of him that in the days when he was courting the lady whom he afterward married the father-in-law-to-be—an aged Methodist, with extremely strict notions in regard to the properties—was injudicious enough on one occasion to enter the parlor without giving any warning of his approach. The consequence was that he found the sweethearts occupying a single chair. Deeply shocked by this spectacle, the old man solemnly said: "Mr. Macdonald, when I was courting Mrs. Brown she sat on one side of the room and I on the other." Macdonald's reply was: "That's what I should have done if I had been courting Mrs. Brown."

If you want to "do" anything for people, let it take the shape of money.

PATHOS AND TRAGEDY

THE SORROWFUL LIFE OF A CHICAGO GIRL.

She Shot Her Deceptive Friend and Took Her Own Life—The Unsatisfied Yearning of a Poetic Soul that Was Ever in Sorrow.

The news reports recently told how a Chicago girl named Burke had shot her deceptive friend, while he sat at the piano singing a love song, and then killed herself. She loved him, and when the terrible truth came to her that he was already married, she made the effort to end his existence and her own. She sleeps to-day in a little Michigan graveyard.

Mabel Burke came into this world with the misfortune of having a sister but eleven months older than herself and a mother who had no love for children. The mother's love was never aroused by the prattling Mabel, and while yet too young to understand its import the baby was given away. The child's grandmother took her finally, and it was at her home that Mabel spent her girlhood. The elderly woman was poor, and when it became time for her charge to start to school the little girl was compelled to work and earn the money with which to buy her books and pay other expenses. Thus she passed through the various grades of the country school, and having finally finished its course she went to a college town and found employment. There her musical talents were developed and, gaining the sympathy of one of her professors, she was assisted to complete a course. She had also by personal application learned stenography and bookkeeping.

About seven years ago the family with whom she had boarded during her struggles in the college went to Chicago and she accompanied it. The young woman was now talented and ambitious. Her applications for employment were of a higher order than those of most stenographers and she was successful. The World's Fair was then in existence and she went there for a position, and a few weeks later she was accepted as a secretary to the Board of Lady Managers and was provided with apartments at the Windemere Hotel. When the fair ended she still found lucrative work. Then the Presidential campaign came on and Miss Burke became stenographer for Mark Hanna, work in which she was regarded an expert.

Her acquaintance began to broaden, her wages were high and it looked at last as if sunshine were to come into her life. Her beauty made her a favorite in the small social circle in which she moved. Then came illness. The bloom left her cheeks, her frame wasted. The doctors told her that a tumorous growth made an operation necessary. For nine months Miss Burke lay in the hospital, and when she finally did return to her home, with sunken cheeks and pale face, she was not entirely recovered. This fact saddened her whole life, though she gradually regained her former good looks and went about quietly in the society in which she had been accustomed to move before her illness. She was bright and clever, a good musician and a strikingly pretty girl, and therefore was much sought after, and had half a dozen admirers. But to intimate friends she confided upon her return from the hospital that she would never marry.

Finally she met David J. Wile, the attorney whose life she attempted to end. Their manner of meeting was clearly in the relationship of attorney and client. The young woman had become imbued with the idea that she had cause for a suit against a physician for malpractice. It bore upon the operation she had undergone. Wile allowed her to believe that there were some hopes for her to recover. They were frquently in each other's company regarding the matter. Their acquaintanceship ripened into friendship, and when finally Wile had persuaded her that she had no case he continued to call upon her.

He had found a bond of sympathy between them. They were both lovers of music, and thus in this platonic sort of way they enjoyed each other's companionship. Months passed by and it was no secret that Miss Burke's friendship for Wile had ripened into love.

Then came the story to the ears of Miss Burke that Wile was already married. She sought out his wife and learned from her lips that the rumor was true. Her last hope vanished. The deception, the wrong practiced upon her was more than she could endure. Discouraged and disheartened beyond all reparation, she plotted her own destruction and to take from the world with her the man whom she loved.

Meeting Wile by appointment, they went together to the Hotel St. Anthony and engaged the parlor with its piano for a few minutes. Miss Burke asked the man to play a love song they had often admired and sung together, and as his fingers glided over the keys and with the strains of the music ringing in her ears she shot him twice. He fell from the stool, and, with the evident impression that he was killed, she turned the smoking revolver to herself and sent a bullet through her heart.

The Time of Births and Deaths.

According to the British Medical Journal, Raseri, who has analyzed 25,474 cases of death and 36,515 of birth, where the exact time of day was noted, finds that the maximum number of deaths occur in the early afternoon (2 to 7 p. m.), and the minimum in the last hours before midnight, while the maximum number of births occur in the early hours of morning, and the minimum in the early hours of the afternoon. As regards the cause of this, he points out that the hours of the maximum number of deaths are precisely those when the pulse rate and temperature are at their highest in health, and when there is a febrile excerbation in illness.

Sam Jones Fooled.

"There was a rich old colonel in Georgia whose wife was a member of the Methodist Church, and he was an old sinner," says Sam Jones.

"No pastor had ever skinned him. I said: 'If I am sent there I'll get mud on my horns and throw that old colonel over the moon.' In course of time I was sent as pastor to that town—and on my way I said to myself:

"'Now, I will clean that old colonel up the first time he sits out in front of me.' A few days after I reached the town I met on the street an elegant looking old gentleman, who introduced himself to me as So-and-so. I said to myself: 'This is my old colonel; he doesn't know who has come to town, but he will find out in a few weeks.'

"The old colonel said: 'I am glad you are our pastor. My wife is a member of your church—our home is always open to our preachers. Come and see us.' After many other kind words and compliments he took from his pocket a roll of money and handed it to me, saying: 'Here is a little money; you will meet up with the poor and distressed that I do not see and you will find need for this in various ways; take it and use it.'

"When I examined the bills I found them to be five $100 bills. I said, 'Pshaw, a man who will do this is no bad man,' and I never opened my mouth about that old colonel. He bought me on the spot, and I never knew it for years after."

The Age of Birds.

An observer mentions the instance of a raven having lived sixty-nine years; a pair of eagle owls, one of which is sixty-eight and the other fifty-three years old; a Bateleur eagle and a condor in the zoological gardens at Amsterdam, aged fifty-five and fifty-two; an imperial eagle of the age of fifty-six, a golden eagle of forty-six and a sea eagle of forty-two; and many birds of the age of forty downward are also recorded.

No old-time doctor discards the medicine which can show an unbroken record of Fifty Years of Cures.

To those doctors, who went up and down the country in every kind of wind and weather, faithful, patient, and true, Ayer's Sarsaparilla owes its first success. Today any doctor of repute who prescribes any Sarsaparilla prescribes Ayer's. We have thousands of testimonials from doctors all over this land that it is the one safe Sarsaparilla, and the doctors know what it is, because we have been giving the formula of it to them for over half a century.

This is why

is "the leader of them all," not because of much advertising nor because of what we put around the bottle, but because of what is in the bottle.

It is the one safe spring medicine for you.

Don't Stand in Your Own Light.

Perhaps you intend to buy a binder or a mower this summer, and it may be that you have concluded that a cheap machine will answer your purpose. This means that you are standing in your own light.

It's better to investigate. There are some things that you should think about before putting your dollars into so expensive a machine as a binder or a mower.

Here are Some Pertinent Facts. Think About Them.

Last season the sales of Deering harvesting machines were 50,000 greater than in any previous year.

The area of ground covered by the Deering works is 62 acres—twice as large as that of any other reaper plant.

6500 employes are engaged in turning out the Deering product for 1899—more than three times the number at work in any other reaper plant.

During the busy part of last season Deering machines were built at the rate of one every 17 seconds.

Don't stand in your own light. Think about these things; they mean something. They mean that Deering machines are the lightest in draft, the easiest to operate and the most reliable and durable grain and grass harvesters manufactured.

His Concern.

A commercial traveler on his trip called upon a well-known chemist. He was nervous as he put his hand in his pocket and handed out a card.

"I represent that concern," said the young man.

"You are fortunate," replied the chemist.

The commercial traveler was encouraged, and said:

"I think so, sir, and the chemist who trades with us is even more so. My firm has the finest line of cosmetics in the country."

"I shouldn't have thought it," slowly responded the man of medicines. "Her complexion looks natural."

And he handed back the photograph which the young man had given him by mistake. He took it and left without waiting to make any farewell remarks.

DRUMMER BADLY TRICKED.

A Cyrano de Bergerac Nose Gets a Man Into Trouble.

"Saw a drummer get pretty badly sold at a little place between Chattanooga and Nashville the other day," said a local traveling man. "He had stopped over to sell some hardware and a merchant warned him to look out for a village wag who would drop around at the hotel that evening with a false nose. 'It's one of those Cyrano de Bergerac affairs, made of pasteboard,' said his informant, 'and this big lubber thinks it's funny to scare strangers with the thing. If you show the least surprise they'll make you set 'em up for the crowd.' 'I'll fix the idiot,' said the drummer, and thanked him for the tip. That evening he was sitting in the little hotel office when, sure enough, in walked a fellow with a proboscis as big as an incandescent lamp and as red as a ripe tomato. 'Hello, Cy!' said the drummer. 'What d'y mean, sir?' said the man attached to the nose. 'Give me that for a scarf-pin,' says the drummer, and grabbed hold of it to pull it off. Good heavens! You ought to have heard the row! I was writing a letter in the back room and I thought somebody had set off a dynamite bomb. By the time I got out Cyrano and the drummer had just knocked over the stove and were mixing up in the woodbox. When they pried them apart they looked like they'd been run through a cane-mill, but the nose was still in position. It was the real stuff and its proprietor was a business competitor of the gent that gave the tip. Low down trick, wasn't it? When I went away the drummer was just beginning to see out of his right eye."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Recovery from Appendicitis.

It is stated in the New York Medical Journal that surgeons admit that 75 per cent. of all cases of appendicitis will recover without operation, but that they claim that 98 per cent. could be saved by operating promptly on every case as soon as discovered. This discloses a debate of great significance. A contributor to that journal says: "It is estimated that there are 200,000 new cases of appendicitis discovered each year in the United States. If this is true and the surgeons are right, 46,000 of them would be ruthlessly sacrificed under medical treatment. But physicians assert that autopsies upon subjects that have died from other diseases than appendicitis show old inflammatory processes about the appendix in one-third of the cases, just as old tuberculous cicatrices are found in the lungs where tuberculosis has never been suspected. In other words, one-third of all coming to the autopsy table, and by inference a large proportion of the population, have gotten well spontaneously from an unsuspected trouble which would have subjected them to a life-endangering operation had they fallen into the hands of a surgeon of sufficient skill to make the diagnosis.

Danger of Hypnotic Sleep.

Be very careful about mesmerizing or hypnotizing yourself. Either is very easily done. Think not? To do it just look at your own reflection in the mirror in the eye for a long time without winking if you can. In a short time a mist spreads over your vision and then vague colors float about you. Then you drop off into a mesmeric or hypnotic sleep from which you might never awaken without the help of a hypnotist or a mesmerist. Many persons have through insomnia been driven to the old device of staring at an object until forced into hypnotic sleep. Often it has happened that they never woke up from such self-inflicted slumber. Take good care that you do not lend yourself to this dangerous practice.

Sixty Miles an Hour.

A steam motor car, for use on the railroads, recently made a trial trip, going at the rate of sixty miles an hour. This will probably be as much of a record beater as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It cures indigestion, constipation, nervousness, liver and kidney trouble.

President King's Mistake.

"I think I never heard a more ludicrous instance of absent-mindedness than one which Dr. William F. King, president of our denominational Cornell College, at Mount Vernon, tells on himself," says Rev. S. P. Marsh, pastor of Haddock Memorial M. E. Church. "The doctor had been invited to a dinner at Cedar Rapids, and just before the guests were to sit down he was called to the telephone to communicate with somebody at the college. The telephone did not work very well, and he had to call 'Hello' an exasperating number of times. Finally he got through with the communication and passed at once to the dining-room, where the other guests had taken seats and were awaiting him. He arose upon invitation to say grace and, assuming a devout attitude, with bowed head and closed eyes and the tips of his fingers joined, he astounded the company and himself as well by exclaiming: 'Hello!' Due solemnity was finally restored and the blessing asked in conventional form."—Sioux City Journal.

Ball Bearings on the Farm.

It is probably a safe prediction that all manufacturers of harvesting machinery will eventually adopt ball bearings wherever it is possible to use them. In 1892 the Deering Harvester Company of Chicago equipped all their machines with ball and roller bearings, and the great popularity of the idea led other manufacturers to experiment with several styles of roller bearings, hoping to apply them to their machines without appearing to imitate the originators too closely. The application of ball bearings is more costly, but popular demand will yet force all competitors to follow the lead of the Deering Company.

THERE are women everywhere who suffer almost constantly because they cannot bring themselves to tell all about their ills to a physician.

Such women can surely explain their symptoms and their suffering by letter to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for the confidence reposed in her has never been violated. Over a million women have been helped by her advice and medicine.

A WOMAN HELPS WOMEN

Mrs. Pinkham in attending to her vast correspondence is assisted by women only. If you are ill, don't delay. Her reply will cost you nothing and it will be a practical help as it was to MISS ELLA E. BRENNER, East Rochester, Ohio, who says: "I shrunk from the ordeal of examination by our physician, yet I knew I must have treatment. My troubles were backache, nervous tired feeling, painful menstruation and leucorrhœa. I am so grateful to you now that I am willing to have my name published to help other girls to take their troubles to you. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound used as you wrote me has made me entirely well and very happy. I shall bless you as long as I live."

Mrs. Pinkham receives thousands of such letters from grateful women.

MISS NELLIE RUSSELL, of 138 Grace St., Pittsburg, Pa., in a letter to Mrs. Pinkham says: "From childhood I suffered from kidney trouble and as I grew older my troubles increased having intense pain running from my waist to my womb and the menses were very painful. One day, seeing your advertisement in one of our papers, I wrote to you.

"When your reply came I began taking your Compound and followed your advice and am now in perfect health, and would advise any lady rich or poor to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I can praise above all other remedies. It is a wonderful help to women."

To a Lawrence Journal reporter Mr. G. H. Snyder, a well known citizen of Lawrence, Kan., related a wonderful story. He said: "I am now seventy years of age. About three years ago I experienced a coldness or numbness in the feet, then creeping up my legs, until it reached my body. I grew thin, appetite poor and did not relish my food. I became unable to move about. Consulted several distinguished physicians, one telling me I had locomotor ataxia, another, creeping paralysis. I took their medicines but continued to grow worse. A friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Before I had finished my first box I found that they were benefiting me. I used twelve boxes and was perfectly cured. County Superintendent

The time is close at hand when the township trustees will meet and elect a county superintendent of schools. We presume there will be no change, and that Mr. Coe will be reelected. This is as it should be. The COURIER has always advocated keeping this important office out of politics and keeping a good man in as long as he desired or as long as he was likely to do better than a new man. We did this for Mr. Merica and we are sure the people profited by his retention in the office. We do this by Mr. Coe, believing that by retaining him the people will be profited. He has been a faithful and capable officer and the experience of the two years just closing will be valuable. We hope to see him get the unanimous support of the trustees.

This shows what thousands have proved—that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers boils and running sores. It stimulates liver, kidney and bowels, expels poisons, helps digestion builds up strength. Only 50c. Sold by H. B. McCord, druggist. Guaranteed.

Obituary of Jacob Ringer

Jacob Ringer was born in Stark. Co., Ohio, Aug. 4th, 1826, and departed this life in Richland Township, last Thursday May 25th, at the ripe age of 74 years, 9 months, and 21 days. He grew to manhood in his native country, receiving a common school education. He learned the shoemaker's trade after his marriage, and worked at it several years in Ohio. He was the third of six children, three having preceded him to the spirit land. Mr. Ringer was united in marriage to Miss Mary Raub on the 8th of Dec, 1846. To them were born no children. They journeyed together in life nearly 19 years, when death separated them. In Sept. 1853, he moved to DeKalb county Indiana, and settled on 80 acres of timbered land which he had bought in the spring of '51. He began to clear the land acre by acre, until now he has a good farm, all well improved, with a pleasant residence and farm buildings. On the 25th of March 1866 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Wright. To this union were born three daughters, Mary M., Sarah A., and Martha S., all of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Ringer shared each others joys and sorrows for nearly 33 years. These sacred bonds, however tender and continued must at last be broken. When a young man, he gave his life to God and united with the United Brethren church at Showers corners, and then placed his membership there and remained a member a number of years. Later, he with his family transferred their membership to the Lutheran church at Sedan, continuing a faithful member till God called him to his rest. During his illness he had glimpses of the heavenly world and of loved ones there, and to him death was a blessed home, going to be at rest with the Master. Mr. Ringer was an affectionate husband a kind father, and tender grandparent, always seeking to promote the happiness and comfort of his family and by them especially will he be greatly missed. He leaves to mourn his death a wife, three daughters, four grand-children and two sisters, besides a great many other relatives. Thus we come to pay the last tribute of love and respect to husband, father, brother and neighbor, to a citizen and pioneer of DeKalb county, and say farewell till in God's own time we meet again.

Husband, rest from sin and sorrow,
Death is o'er and life is won:
On thy slumber dawns no morrow,
Rest, thine earthly race is run.

Father, wake! the night is waning,
Endless day is round thee poured:
Enter thou the rest remaining,
For the people of the Lord.

The funeral service will be conducted tomorrow at 10:30 a. m, from the U. B. church at Showers corners. Interment will take place in the cemetery near there. Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating.

Santa Anna's Leg.

Those who saw the famous Mexican general's wooden leg in the Illinois building at the World's fair, will be interested to hear that the Illinois legislature offered a resolution that the wooden leg of General Santa Anna, found by the Illinois volunteers on the battlefield of Cerro Gordo, in the Mexican war, and now on exhibition in the state museum, be returned to the family of the deceased general. The resolution was referred to the committee on federal relations.

Santa Anna's leg was shot off at the battle of San Jacinto in 1836, the decisive fight of the war for Texan independance. He had a wooden leg made to take its place, but on the occasion of his taking charge of the Mexican army against the Americans in the Mexican war, he rode in a carriage. When he saw he was cornered, he was helped onto a horse and got away. His wooden leg, and freshly cooked dinner were found in the carriage.

He Fooled The Surgeons.

All doctors told Renic Hamilton, of West Jefferson, O., after suffering 18 months from Rectal Fistula, he would die unless a costly operation was performed; but he cured himself with five boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the surest Pile cure on Earth, and the best Salve in the World. 25 cents a box. Sold by H. B. McCord, druggist.

George Cox Graduates

Our readers will remember that Geo. E. Cox for some years a teacher at Garrett, went last year to Indianapolis to enter on the study of law. He entered the law department of the University of Indianapolis and is one of the graduates at their recent commencement, May 24. We note by the card that accompanies his commencement program that he has already formed a law partnership. The firm is Dearth & Cox, at Muncie, Ind., his partner being Clarence W. Dearth, who graduated at the same time. The COURIER wishes the new firm abundant success.

First Into the 20th Century

Many DeKalb people will remember Charles Wagner, who many years ago moved to Fairbury Nebraska. He was, we believe quite prosperous, but died a few years ago. Recently Mrs. Wagner married Mr. J. Fisk, but states that she still wants the COURIER that has been a constant visitor more than twenty years. So she sends a payment up into 1901 being, we believe the first subscriber who has paid into the new century, the '20th century.!' She is starting out in the right way and we venture the prediction that her new condition will be a happy one.

Thursday's Daily.

—Frank Spade of the pool room on West 7th, was called before 'Squire Walter this afternoon and plead guilty to allowing minors to be in his place and play pool. He was given a small fine, but the frills added, made a total of near $14. He says he will do it no more.

—Robert Johnson, of Wichita, Kansas, is here now, visiting his brothers I. M. Johnson and Nathan Johnson and their families. He was formerly auditor of Steuben county, but has been at Wichita about eleven years. He is looking as if the climate of that former boom town agrees with him.

—Mrs. Wm. McIntyre and her sister Miss Lillie McTighe start for the south today. We believe they will remain some time with friends at Little Rock, Ark., and Las Vegas, New Mexico. They will, we presume also go by way of Memphis, Tenn., to visit the family of her son John McIntyre. These two ladies have scores of earnest friends here, whose best wishes go with them.

—Friends of Westminster Seminary will read with interest several changes contemplated or completed in the personnel of the school. Mrs. Wells has gone to Chicago where she is secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Missions, and Miss Sharpe expects to go there also, at the close of this school year and engage in similar work. We are not informed as to who will take their places in the school.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF COD-LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES

should always be kept in the house for the following reasons:

FIRST—Because, if any member of the family has a hard cold, it will cure it.

SECOND—Because, if the children are delicate and sickly, it will make them strong and well.

THIRD—Because, if the father or mother is losing flesh and becoming thin and emaciated, it will build them up and give them flesh and strength.

FOURTH—Because it is the standard remedy in all throat and lung affections.

No household should be without it. It can be taken in summer as well as in winter.

—It would appear from testimony and argument in the insurance case now in court, that the company has no capital in money, but that the originators put in several notes, as a nest egg from which they could draw when as loss was to be paid. COURT NEWS

Thursday's Daily.

As noted yesterday, the railway case of Andreon vs L. S. Ry. began here before the jury. The details of this case will be interesting.

In October, 1897, John Anderson, who lives north of Angola, shipped a load of hogs from that place, to Buffalo N. Y. There were 150 of them, and two calves were added to the load. They had to come south to Waterloo, then go east, and the trip usually takes two or three days. In this case the weather happened to turn hot. It was extremely hot for October and the stock suffered greatly and it is claimed there was some delay. On reaching Buffalo, a fearful condition of things was found in the car Over half of the hogs, 84 in all, had died, and their bodies were terribly decomposed. Many of them it is said, appeared to be melted, and the grease frying out of them, Of course, the living hogs were in a bad condition, but were saved. and we suppose sold. Mr. Anderson claimed damages from the company, as he believed the loss was the fault of the employes of the road. The company refused to settle, as they claim that the loss was occasioned by the hot spell of weather, a matter over which they had no control. The trial began in Angola, but was brought here on a change of venue. The attorneys for Anderson are: Wm. Brown and Cyrus Cline; and for the Lake Shore are R. C. Bell and C. E. Emanuel.

Friday's Daily.

The witnesses for the plaintiff, having been all used, last evening, the defense today began calling witnesses. Carey, a freight conductor on the Lake Shore, Jackson Branch, testified that Oct. 14, 1897, at 2:35 p. m. he took into his train at Angola a car of hogs and took it to Waterloo at 3:55. Then he ran his engine to Auburn and got a single deck car of hogs and took it to Waterloo.

H. J. Stowell testified. Is a freight conductor on Michigan Division. Took a pick up train from Elkhart to Toledo that day. At Kendallville picked up a car of hogs. Left Waterloo at 4:55 p. m. At Butler stopped some time. At Stryker, Ohio, showered the stock from a stand pipe, which has a hose, with flat nozzle. Saw nothing wrong with hogs there, but did not examine closely. Got to Air Line Junction, the end of the division at 6: 05 next morning. Left the car with yardmaster there.

Weather was warm. Saw nothing wrong with this car, but a few days later, heard some hogs had died.

Thomas Broder called. Live at Tipton, Ohio. Am freight conductor for the Lake Shore. Oct. 15, at 11 40 I pulled the train having that stock and nine others out of the yards at Air Line Junction. We watered them all Huron, 60 miles east, then again at River Bed, a mile this side of Cleveland, and 49 miles east of Huron. The next watering place is at Collingwood, and that being as far as I go, do not know whether they were watered or not. Got there at 9:20 p.m. made good time on my run.

Griffin, the freight conductor who had the next run, from Collingwood to Westfield, said he watered the hogs at that place on starting then at Mentor. After that we did not stop. We always water stock while train is moving. At Westfield, I stopped I had noticed stench in that car from the first.

Owen Garmon, the next freight conductor took the train from Westfield to East Buffalo. Watered all the stock at Westfield and ran 39 miles to Angola, N. Y., and watered them there, then 25 miles further left them at E. Buffalo. That car smelled bad. Started at 4:15 a. m. Oct. 16, and got there at 8:40 a. m.

Saturday's Daily.

Harvey Barnes of Angola testified that he helped to load the hogs. Put in straw loose about a foot deep. Pumped water for a pool in the yard and had the chute wet when loaded. Put about four sacks of corn on each deck. I spoke to Goodale who was helping, that there was too much straw for such warm weather. We generally put 500 lbs ice on each deck in warm weather, but at this time could not get ice. Barnes went to get ice but none could be had. There were 153 hogs and 2 calves.

The yard master of the yards at Air Line Junction was called. Said this car was overloaded. He was accustomed to see such cars. Thinks the load was 27,000 lbs.

James Sheffer of Auburn sworn. Ships a good deal of stock. The car that was hauled up from this place to Waterloo Oct. 14, '97 and was sent east with the Angola car, was his. He thinks cars should have had ice and that sawdust is better than straw. Thinks too much corn will heat the hogs, but will keep them quiet, and to that extent help to keep them cool.

A. W. Hendry of Angola was put on the stand by the plaintiff. He thought a lot of hogs kept in a car that length of time and in warm weather, and not watered would many die. Cn cross ex. Senator Bell asked him if he were not under indictment. Hendry replied hotly "Yes I am, and by a lot of thieves." He said that matter was none of Bell's business That the indictment was brought a year or two ago, and he did not know what for. He had tried to have the case tried, but had not succeeded. He was very hot, and for a minute or two things were interesting. The Judge got them cooled down a little, but there is still some feeling between attorney and witness.

Resuming the examination, he said ice was good in a car of stock, but not worth much unless water is used when the weather is hot. He had often got the Gen. Supt. to let him get a car into a fast train so as to get it through in better time.

The examination of witnesses was ended at about 7 p. m. and court dismissed till this morning when argument by council began.

The first speaker was Wm. M. Brown of Angola for the plaintiff. His plea was mainly the negligence of the Company, in allowing the car of hogs to remain too long on sidetracks, 10½ hours between Angola and Toledo, and 5 hrs and 35 min. at Toledo, and so on along the journey. He also claimed the stock was not watered or drenched as they should have been.

Emanuel spoke next, for the road. He was followed by Bell for the same side. Then Cline gave the closing argument for the plaintiff closing at about 3:30 p. m. The jury then received their charge and retired. And Courtroom Bailiff Milo Husselman is liable to have a jury on his hands over Sunday.

Gents:—I have used many medicines, but think I got the best results from your Pepsin Syrup. One other member of my family also used it with the same happy effect. The complaint for which we used the Syrup was stomach trouble called in the books Gastralgia, a great deal of acid eructions (belchings) with flatulence of the stomach. Very truly, DR. W. E. McDIVITT.

A Streak of Good Luck

Yesterday morning Rev. Brosy with several of his young people went to St. Joe to attend the DeKalb county Sunday School convention. At the close of the forenoon session, Mr. Brosy was invited to take dinner at the home of Mr. John Widney. After dinner Mr. Widney said to Mr. Brosy, that there was a young couple in the room who wished to see him. On entering the room it was soon learned they wanted to get married, so it was arranged to take place immediately after the close of the afternoon session. At the appointed hour, Mr. Brosy repaired to the home of Mr. John Widney, and joined in marriage Mr. Oliver M. Foote. of Butler, Ind., and Miss Lulu Widney, of St. Joe, Ind. This is a worthy young couple, and will make their future home in Butler, Ind., and our best wishes go with them.

Perfection Found at Last

Decatur, Ill., Jan 24, 1898.

Dear Sirs:—I received a gun shot wound in '64 while in the army which caused partial paralysis of the bowels and from that time to the present I have had to use a laxative. I have tried a great many kinds of medicines in that time but have never found any as effective or that has been as near natural as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Yours truly, JOHN ARMSTRONG.

A Pleasant Party

There was a most delightful tea party at the home of Dr. Casebeer last evening given by Mr. and Mrs. Altenburg, prior to their departure for the south. The guests present were only those who for many years have always been intimate friends. They included Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Olds and daughter Ruth, Mr. and Mrs. Will Eckhart and children, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Lochner and son Don. The evening was a most enjoyable one and included a sumptuous dinner served in several courses. Mr. and Mrs. Altenburg leave tomorrow for Indianapolis, where they will spend Sunday with friends, and then depart for their home in Tullahoma, Tenn., where Mr. Altenburg is interested in a company for the manufacture of proprietary medicines. They have the best wishes of all for their future success and prosperity.

THE COMMENCEMENT.

The Opera House was packed full all over the body of the building and many well dressed ladies and gentlemen occupied seats in the gallery.

Promptly on time, the exercises began with a prayer by Mr. Guild. Bessie Hunter gave a whistling solo, which was sweet, of course, as were all those she gave, and she was called back several times.

The first graduate to speak was Grace Rush, "The Romance of America" being her theme. It was a well prepared and well given oration, and she made an excellent impression.

The next was "The Dawn of the Twentieth Century" by Ida E. George, who spoke distinctly and carefully, as in fact did all the others. She treated her subject well.

Maud Link's theme required different treatment. "Moses at the Sea," brought out many good thoughts and it was plain she has studied along that line.

Mrs. Garwood and Mrs. Hovey Hanna played a delightful piano solo at this point of the progam.

"Take Nobody's Dust" was the title of a sparkling little speech by Pearl Heabler, and being on a new line, many new ideas were given. She spoke well.

Gladys Fitch made a graceful appearance as she spoke her oration, "A Modern Cinderella." This idea though based on an old one came up in a new dress. She handled the subject finely.

Marguerite Weimer's subject was. "The Modern Cincinnatus" a theme that took thought and preparation. But she seemed much at ease in its treatment and has good gestures and inflections.

Then came a debate. "Resolved that we should annex the Philippines," the affirmative being taken by Jarl Sprott and the other side by Frank Baxter. These two boys were very much in earnest and had prepared their work as if these important questions had been for them to settle. We feel like complimenting them on the ability they displayed and their knowledge of the subject treated.

At this point Maude Trover sang a solo to the accompaniment of Mrs. Garwood. Of course it was enjoyable.

"The Future of the Orient" was the theme of Miss Mae Welch, and it was one that affords a wide scope for its treatment. We feel like complimenting this young lady on the skill and ability she displayed, as well as her knowledge of the conditions in that distant part of the earth.

Dean Metcalf spoke of "The Growth of Democracy," treating the subject in its general sense of course and treating it well. He makes a good appearance on the stage for one who has had but little work of this kind to do.

Geo. Lanning on behalf of the school board, then presented the diplomas in a brief but effective speech, and this closed the exercises.

Altogether this was one of the best commencements we have had. Certainly there is more to be learned, more to be commended and much more enjoyment in these brilliant little speeches, sweet music and birdlike whistling than in listening to a long, dry address by even a famous man.

Fine Figure

Many women lose their girlish forms after they become mothers. This is due to neglect. The figure can be preserved beyond question if the expectant mother will constantly use during the whole period of pregnancy. The earlier its use is begun, the more perfectly will the shape be preserved.

Mother's Friend not only softens and relaxes the muscles during the great strain before birth, but helps the skin to contract naturally afterward. It keeps unsightly wrinkles away, and the muscles underneath retain their pliability.

Mother's Friend is that famous external liniment which banishes morning sickness and nervousness during pregnancy; shortens labor and makes it nearly painless; builds up the patient's constitutional strength, so that she emerges from the ordeal without danger. The little one, too, shows the effects of Mother's Friend by its robustness and vigor.

Sold at drug stores for $1 a bottle.

Eighth Grade Exercises.

The graduation of the Eighth Grade pupils, which is the regular common school graduation, is last step before entering the High School. Mrs. Richards had sent a limited number of invitations, as many as the capacity of her room would allow, and at 9:00 a. m. the exercises began with a very appropriate prayer by Rev. Geo. Engleman.

Miss Katie Kiblinger gave the first musical number, "Old Folks at Home" and variations. It was sweetly played, and reflected much credit on her advancement in music.

The literary papers that followed were reviews of some well known poems by some well known author, and it was in our judgment, as wise a plan as could be chosen. Each had evidently studied the selection carefully, then written on its salient points and from these, had drawn conclusions.

Ralph Mitchell's paper, was on "The Ladder of St. Augustine," and he went into its merits like one who knew where it would lead him. His extracts were all to the point.

Myrtle Gill gave for her paper, "Westminster Abbey," which was a fine subject and well handled. It was a subjet that would lead one into the best thoughts of the best men in English literature.

Allice Brownell's review was Bryant's sweet verses, "To a Waterfowl," an every day subject, which the poet had handled in such a masterful way. She alluded to the circumstances of financial disaster under which Mr. Bryant was then laboring, for it is known he was a New York merchant, whose heavy business had become tangled, entailing great loss which preyed on the sensitive poet's mind.

Mr. Widney's song "The Mighty Deep" was one of his grand "basso profundo" solos, and one of his very best.

Hubert Hartman's theme was "Antiquity of Freedom," a fine subject, and he handled it well for a boy of his years, and brought out some of the valuable lessons of the past.

Maude Conrad had for her review, "Excelsior," This simple, yet sublime old poem gave free range to her thoughts and she took advantage of it to make up a fine paper. One of the lessons she drew was, that it is not success, but the endeavor to succeed, that has value for us.

Vera Warrick treated that other familiar and ever popular poem, "Maud Mueller." It was bright and often its points connected the story the poet so sweetly told, with the every day life of us all.

Anna Cuppy played a sweet solo on the piano. She too does nicely for one so young.

Arlie Tucker's review was "The Flood of Years" a fine article and well delivered, with many excellent ideas brought out.

Harold Warrick read a well prepared paper "In School Days." It was bright and the conclusion was especially valuable.

The next was an instrumental duet, with the French horn and saxaphone, played by C, H. Knapp and son Karl. They are a talented pair of players, and we always enjoy music of this kind.

Edith Trout came next, with her paper on "A Psalm of Life," She lost no points but made everything count and drew inspiration from all that familiar poem's beauties. She is a sweet reader and we feel like giving her an extra good word for work well done.

Bessie Kinsey's theme was "The Last Leaf," by Holmes, a subject capable of furnishing many valuable lessons, and she drew these out into the lighth with a good deal of skill.

Mrs. Ed. Robbins sang one of her sweetest and best songs, "Spring Tide" a subject so well fitted to the occasion that all reatized its appropriateness. It was a musical gem of rare merit.

Mr. Harrison's address to the class, on presenting the diplomas was a bit of clear cut and concise English, such as he has a gift for. He reminded them of the good work they had done, but cautioned them that this is not the end, but one of the important way stations in their school course.

The audience then bowed heads for the benediction given by Rev. L. Oser of the German M. E. church, and were dismissed.

We feel that high compliments are due to Mrs Richards for the good taste and judgment shown in the work. It was one of the finest school exercises we ever had.

Hon. John F. Potter

Editor Powell of the Laporte Republican, who well remembers Mr. Potter has an article in his issue of June 2, that recalls a once famous episode. We might add also, that W. H. Mc Intosh of Auburn, knew Mr. Potter well, in his Wisconsin home, has often visited him and seen that famous bowie knife, Here is Mr. Powell's article.

The recent death ef ex-Congressman John F. Potter, of Wisconsin, at the age of 82, brings vividly to the mind of the writer his first visit to Washington in 1860, 39 years ago. It was just after the troulbe that occurred between Roger. A. Pryor, of Virginia, and Mr. Potter wherein Mr. Potter's name was most ardently cherished throughout the Northern states, especially the opponents of slavery. Mr. Potter was opposed to the pending bill, which was made an administration measure, of admitting Kansas into the Union as a state under the Lecompton constitution. During the discussion of that measure very bitter words were used on both sides. Mr. Potter, like Owen Lovejoy, Joshua R, Giddings, and other anti-slavery leaders, was bold and outspoken in his opposition to that proslavery measure. He incurred the hostility of Mr. Pryor and the result was a challenge from the Virginia statesman for a duel. Mr. Potter was the one that received the challenge he had the right under the code to name the weapon. He accepted the overture and proceeded to name bowie knives for execution, a darkened room in some upper story of a building in Washington with no one to be present but themselves, the outside door or doors to be locked. Mr. Hindman the bearer of the message from Mr. Pryor, refused to take back the reply, claiming that it was barbarous and could not be considered by his side. This ended the contest at once. We were in the house gallery one afternoon early in June a few days after the end of this strife and witnessed repeated voting by that body of two tellers standing in front of the speaker while all the members on one side passed between them and were contented and then the opposition passed through in the same way. These votes were frequently given while we were there. Both Pryor and Potter were pointed out to us at the beginning.

When the national Repulican convention was in session in Chicago in May of that year, Frank Blair, a Republilican member of congress from St. Louis, in behalf of the Missouri delegation in that convention, presented to Mr. Potter a blade seven feet long and three inches, wide, properly lettered, as a memento of the esteem the Missouri Republicans held the distinguished congressman from the Badger state. Mr. Potter was a splendidly built man and in the prime of life, Pryor was much taller and not so heavy. He is now in the city of New York, occupying the position of judge of one of the courts there.

Good Democratic Doctrine

(Fort Wayne Journal)

Responses to the invitations sent out by the Chicago Civic Federation for the conferance to be held June 26 to 28 on combinations and trusts, have already begun coming in. Governor Mount, of Indiana, expresses the opinion that trusts are antagonistic to public policy and a menace to public good. He continues: "I have always advocated and believed in the protection and encouragement of American industries, believing—and history has justified such belief—that home competition would regulate prices: but if home industries are to unite in gigantic trusts, thus destroying competition and controlling prices, then I am for removing protection from all articles manufactured by such trusts, to the end that if competition cannot be maintained at home we can have competition from aboad.".

This is getting pretting close to the democratic side of the argument. Governor Mount has merely repeated what the democratic party has argued and the republicans have combatted—that protection breeds monopolies and trusts, stifles competition, and wrings tribute from a helpless public. The conversion of Governor Mount looks as though the war had been carried into the enemy's camp in earnest.

MARION CLARK FOUND.

Abducted Child in Custody of Mrs. Jennie Wilson, Near Sloatsburg, N. Y.

Marion Clark, the 21-months-old child kidnapped from its parents in New York city, May 21, was discovered near Sloatsburg, eight miles from Garnerville, N. Y., recently, at the farmhouse of Charles Youmans, in custody of Mrs. Jennie Wilson, who took the baby to that place. Mrs. Wilson went to St. John's postoffice to get her mail, taking Marion with her. Mrs. Garry, the postmistress, delivered her only one letter. The Clark baby attracted the country people by her large blue eyes and pink complexion. As soon as the notices of the abduction reached the neighborhood, people began to suspect that the child was Marion Clark. Deputy Sheriff William H. Charleston found Mrs. Wilson at the Youmans farm and demanded the child. Mrs. Wilson claimed she knew nothing of the child. The deputy arrested Mrs. Wilson, who weakened and made a confession. Arthur Clark, the father of the abducted baby, arrived, accompanied by Sergeant Morris, of Capt. McClusky's staff. Mr. Clark immediately identified the child as his lost Marion.

The commision adopted the report from Brito to Lake Nicaragua, called the Childs route, and from Lake Greytown, called the Lull route.

Whole Train Is Destroyed.

Sixth Ohio Mustered Out.

The Sixth Ohio, Col. W. V. McMaken, was mustered out at Augusta, Ga. Gen. S. M. Young, who is in charge of the mustering out of the troops in the South, says the Sixth Ohio was one of the best, if not the best, regiment he had seen in the army.

UNFAVORABLE WHEAT REPORT.

Outlook for the Winter Crop Is Far from Encouraging.

Bradstreet's report for this week says: "Favorable features of current trade still, as for a long time past, largely outnumber those of an opposite character. Wholesale distribution is naturally less active as the season advances, but comparisons with last year are still very satisfactory. Industrial activity is widespread, and the prices of most staples are either very firm or tending upward, except in the cases of products affected by weather conditions. Reports from winter wheat become increasingly unfavorable. Wheat (including flour) shipments for the week aggregate 3,198,318 bushels, against 2,212,206 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 3,845,818 bushels, against 2,753,414 bushels last week."

LOCATE A SCHOOL FOR CRIME.

Columbus, Ohio, Police Find a Gang of Boys Who Steal by Method.

Columbus Ohio, police have unearthed a school for crime, at which boys are taught to steal and dispose of the stolen goods. Five boys have been arrested, Frank Hill, Freeman Gaskill, Willie Inskeep, W. H. Bonde and Landon Hammond, all of whom are several years under age. The attention of the authorities was drawn to the gang by several wheels which were stolen recently on the north side, where the rendezvous is located. A two-horse wagon load of miscellaneous articles stolen by the gang was recovered by the arresting officers. The boys had regular methods which they followed in their systematic robberies. Several of the lads are under suspended sentences to the reform farm.

GETS FIRST SHOT AND KILLS.

Chicago Man Learns of Texan's Threat and Prepares for Fight.

J. A. Tyson, a traveling man representing the Parisian Portrait Company of Chicago, shot and killed Charles Marshall, a life insurance agent at Waco, Texas. The trouble arose over the payment of some article which Tyson had sold Marshall's wife and which Tyson claimed Marshall would not pay for. Marshall stated to many persons that Tyson had insulted his wife for not settling for the article purchased and that he intended to kill him on sight. Tyson, learning this, armed himself, and as soon as he met Marshall opened fire, shooting Marshall three times, from the effects of which he died.

SUICIDE BECAUSE OF DEBT.

Architect William F. Hackney of Kansas City Shoots Himself.

William F. Hackney, architect to the Kansas City Board of Education and one of the city's foremost men of his profession, committed suicide in his office by blowing out his brains. He left a note to the newspapers stating that he was hopelessly in debt, that his income was not sufficient to maintain his family as they should be kept, and that he had decided "to quit business." He leaves a widow and one daughter. Mr. Hackney went there in 1887 from Des Moines, where he was married and where he was one of the architects of the Iowa State Capitol.

Exposition Work Is Outlined.

F. W. Peck, United States commissioner general to the Paris exposition, has returned to Chicago. He said the United States would have as much space at the exposition as any other country in the world. During his recent visit to Paris, Commissioner Peck secured concessions that have swelled the space allotted to this country to 302,000 square feet. Speaking of his work in Paris, Mr. Peck said: "The American exhibit will probably be the most complete ever made by this country. Thomas A. Edison has promised to show some things that have never before been exhibited, and, in fact, are not now known to the American public. The greatest of our exhibits will be in the machinery department at Vincennes, where we will establish an American machine shop that will cover 30,000 square feet. Another exhibit will be that of a model American passenger train. There will be an automobile exhibit, and a bicycle exhibit. The bicycle manufacturers have agreed to put up a building of their own, which will occupy 10,000 square feet. There will be a special forestry building containing an exhibit of American logs. The jewelry exhibit will be the finest ever seen. An American restaurant will be another feature of the exhibit."

Postoffice Robbers Taken.

After a long chase the Government secret service men have jailed the gang that robbed the Boulder, Colo., postoffice last month. The prisoners are George Bomboy, Otto Noffka, alias "Kid" Mason, and two women who traveled with them. The property stolen amounted to nearly $500. The robbers were traced to Omaha, and from there it was learned they departed for Kansas City. "Kid" Mason and one woman returned. That night their house was raided. Mason and the woman were taken to the city jail, where they told the story of having gone to Kansas City with Bomboy and the other woman. They described the house where they stopped and told the officers many facts connected with the robbery. The officers started for Kansas City, taking the Bomboy woman along to point out the location of the house. The woman made a clean breast of all the facts connected with the robbery. All of the parties will be taken to Denver, where the three men have already been indicted by the United States grand jury.

Sues the State for Salary.

J. M. Allen, a member of the House of Representatives from Athens County, O., has sued the State for $600, the amount of his salary for a year. The Auditor of State and Speaker Mason, who refused to sign the voucher, are made defendants. The Auditor refused to issue the warrant on the treasurer because Allen holds the place of confidential clerk to his father-in law, the Columbus pension agent, at a salary of $1,600 a year.

$100,000 Loss at Cleveland.

Fire started in the Ohio Sash and Door Company's big factory at Cleveland. The flames repeatedly communicated to nearby buildings. Beyond a severe scorching, however, nothing was destroyed except the Ohio Sash and Door Company's plant and lumber piles. The total loss is about $100,000, partly covered by insurance.

Dr. Cornwall Kills Himself.

Dr. Richmond Cornwall, a Kansas City physician, prominent by reason of his strange career, committed suicide in the home of his brother-in-law, Dr. J. C. Whittier, shooting himself in the head and dying almost instantly. He left a note saying that despondency over financial affairs was responsible for the act.

Killed by a Lightning Bolt

Louis E. Bert, a farmer of Oxford township, Ohio, was killed by lightning at a barn-warming near his home. About thirty persons were in the barn and all were prostrated, several of them being more or less injured by the shock.

Cyclones in Three States.

Cyclones in South Dakota, Iowa and Nebraska caused serious loss of life and destroyed buildings by the score. Growing crops were ruined and fruit trees stripped of their foliage.

Cuban Strike Ended.

The payment of Cuban soldiers was continued at Havana Monday, and more men presented themselves to receive their money than on either of the two preceding days. One hundred and fourteen men Monday received $75 each at La Punta, and 103 of them turned in their arms. Sixty-nine of the men belong to the Havana regiment commanded by Col. Miyere, while the others belonged to Gen. Gomez's personal command and the Francisco Gomez and Goicuria regiments. At least 100 others applied for money, many of them with arms, but their names were either not on the lists or their papers were irregular. When night came there were still men waiting to be paid. Owing to the difficulty of hunting for names on the lists and the difficulty of identification the payments are necessarily slow. The American military authorities and Gen. Gomez and his friends were jubilant over the change from the previous day, when only thirty men drew their money. Seventy-five dollars is more money than many of the soldiers have seen for years.

BAPTIST MEMBERSHIP 4,141,995.

Report of the Secretary of Missionary Union Encouraging.

Monday's session of Baptists at San Francisco was devoted to the eighty-fifth anniversary of the American Baptist Missionary Union. The secretary, the Rev. H. C. Mabie of Boston, showed the present membership on this continent to be 4,141,995. Of preachers 1,558 are engaged in nominally Christian lands and 1,274 in heathen lands. Missionary churches number 1,815, with 205,306 members. The Baptists are supporting 460 foreign missionaries. The Rev. Dr. T. J. Morgan of New York made a brief address at the morning session, referring to the peace congress now in session at The Hague. He offered the following to be sent to Ambassador White: "A million Northern Baptists, represented in annual convention, invoke upon your conference the benediction of the Prince of Peace." A motion to cable the message was adopted unanimously.

TO FIGHT DISEASED MILK.

Coming Convention of Physicians Will Study Tuberculosis.

Tuberculosis is to be considered at a convention of Chicago physicians, which will be called at an early date. Particular attention will be paid to the spread of the disease germs by the sale and use of milk. Last December a committee of twenty five members was appointed from the Chicago Medical Society, at the suggestion of Dr. Reynolds, health commissioner, to make arrangements for a convention. That committee appointed a subcommittee of five members, who are now considering the matter, and they will make a report soon.

LEADING CANDIDATES FOR THE SPEAKERSHIP.

DAVID B. HENDERSON, OF IOWA.

ALBERT J. HOPKINS, OF ILLINOIS.

CYCLONES IN FOUR STATES.

Big Storms Deal Death and Ruin in Farming Sections.

Cyclones in South Dakota, Iowa and Nebraska Sunday caused serious loss of life and destroyed buildings by the score. Growing crops were ruined and fruit trees stripped of their foliage. Wires are down in the sections visited, so that it has been impossible to obtain details of the damage in outlying districts. Michigan was swept by an unusually severe electric storm, many houses being struck by lightning.

Meager reports give the following casualties:

Bijou Hills, S. D.

Killed 7
Fatally injured 2

Keswick, Iowa.

Seriously injured 5

Watervliet, Mich.

Killed 1

Hastings and Beatrice, Neb.

Seriously injured 3

A violent rainstorm which broke over Chicago at 10:20 o'clock Sunday night flooded the city and suburbs, causing much damage to property.

A disastrous and fatal tornado passed through the country in the vicinity of Bijou Hills, twenty-five miles south of Chamberlain, S. D., resulting in the death of seven persons and the serious injury of two others. The tornado formed on a section in plain view of hundreds of persons, and moved in a southerly course. The storm destroyed a church and a school house, after which it reached the Peterson place, where the execution done was appalling. The dead and injured were strewn all about the premises, all being bruised and maimed in a shocking manner, while the buildings were smashed to splinters. After doing its worst the storm passed into the range of hills skirting the Missouri river, where it appears to have been dissolved. The path covered by the storm was only about twenty rods wide and about three miles in length. The wind was accompanied by a heavy fall of rain and hail, the latter being as large as goose eggs. Everything in the course of the storm was completely destroyed. A large amount of stock was killed.

Probably the most destructive tornado that ever visited Nebraska passed through the northern part of Hamilton County Saturday night at 7 o'clock, destroying from $75,000 to $100,000 worth of property, including fifteen dwellings, one church, one school house, two iron bridges across the Blue river, barns, corncribs, outbuildings, orchards, groves, fences and stock. In Cuming County a cloudburst in the northeast part caused much destruction. The creek was filled bank high in a few minutes and the adjoining bottoms flooded. Over 1,000 tons of hay is known to be washed away and destroyed, and miles of fencing is ruined. Corn land is badly washed.

A terrific hailstorm struck Hastings, Neb., Sunday afternoon and continued for fifteen minutes, during which time several persons were hurt, over 2,000 panes of glass broken, fruit and grain destroyed and chickens and birds killed and injured. At the asylum for chronic insane 400 panes of glass were broken in the main building and 1,300 in the green houses, where a great amount of damage was done. The hail stones were as large as hens' eggs and came down with such force as to kill chickens. Young fruit on the cherry, apple and peach trees was all knocked off and many limbs stripped from the trees. All the winter wheat was destroyed. Corn and other grain was not far enough advanced to be affected.

Terrific storms swept over Iowa Saturday and Sunday. At Tama there was almost a cloudburst and much damage done. The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad sustained much damage. A tornado struck the farm house of a man named McCoy, half a mile south of Keswick. The building was demolished and five persons were injured, Mrs. McCoy fatally. Rain and hail followed the storm, and much damage to the growing crops resulted. A storm passed through the country twenty-five miles northeast of Des Moines Sunday afternoon. Several houses and barns are reported to have been blown down and considerable damage done, but so far as known no lives were lost in that locality.

NO PARDON FOR MRS. MAYBRICK

British Government Says There Is No New Evidence.

Ambassador Choate informs the State Department that the British Government has declined to grant a pardon to Mrs. Florence Maybrick, sentenced to prison for life in July, 1889, for the murder of her husband.

At the request of friends of Mrs. Maybrick in this country Ambassador Choate was instructed to request the British Government to release Mrs. Maybrick. Mr. Choate complied with his instructions several weeks ago, and the British foreign office at once agreed to have the matter looked into again by the home office. The home office has reviewed the case, and Mr. Choate has received through the foreign office a courteous reply, stating that the British Government regrets that nothing has developed to cause a change in its attitude toward the prisoner, no new evidence tending to show her innocence of the crime of which she was convicted having been presented. The friends of Mrs. Maybrick in this country are still petitioning the State Department in her behalf.

RULES FOR DREYFUS.

Civil Court of Cassation Reports in Favor of Revision.

A new trial for Dreyfus is assured and the prisoner will be brought back from Devil's Island and his case passed upon by a new court martial. This was determined upon Saturday, when Ballot de Beaupre, president of the civil section of the court of cassation, reported to M. Mazeau, president of the court of cassation, in favor of revision. The French Government therefore officially announces that former Captain Dreyfus, now a prisoner on Devil's Island, will be retried by a court martial. The sittings will be held in a garrison town distant from Paris.

While it is not believed that any serious outbreak will follow the announcement of the court in favor of Dreyfus, the Government is prepared to take prompt action in case of serious disturbances. It is known that several demonstrations have been organized. Orders have been issued to the military police to hold themselves in readiness and any attempt at rioting will be suppressed in a vigorous fashion.

THE SPEAKERSHIP CONTEST.

Wisconsin Favors Henderson, While Indiana May Prefer Hopkins.

It is now generally accepted that the next Speaker will be a Western man, and that the contest will be between Henderson and Hopkins. The Wisconsin congressional delegation, at its meeting in Milwaukee Saturday afternoon, unanimously resolved to throw its entire strength to Congressman Henderson in the contest. They got together, they said, to indorse a Western man, and show that Wisconsin was in the contest in dead earnest. The Wisconsin delegation placed the immediate advantage with Henderson, but Wisconsin is only one of the middle Western States to declare for the candidate of another State.

A Washington correspondent says that the action of the Wisconsin congressional delegation has given a decided impetus to the Henderson speakership boom in the East. It shows that the men who have been in control of the House organization for the last four years are striving to retain that control in the next House. Payne of New York, Dalzell of Pennsylvania, Grosvenor of Ohio, Steele of Indiana, Babcock of Wisconsin, Henderson of Iowa, Towney of Minnesota, were among the more influential members in the Reed organization, and with Reed out of Congress they will endeavor to continue in the leadership. They have found it quite improbable that an Eastern man would be elected, and they are turning to Col. Henderson.

An Indianapolis dispatch says the Indiana Republicans are very much in favor of Hopkins, and the party managers are said to favor him. The most potent cause that is operating in Hopkins' favor is the belief that he would approve drastic legislation against trusts, and as this question is to be prominent in the coming national campaign the Indiana Congressmen will be for him, as he is known to hold Western sentiments regarding trusts and the necessity for legislation against them. The best-posted politicians say that the nine members of Congress from Indiana will vote for him.

DIE IN A WRECK.

Burlington Train of Seven Cars Is Almost Demolished.

Nine persons were killed in two railroad wrecks in Iowa, the result of passenger trains running into washouts, caused by storms. Forty-six more were injured and some of them will probably die. The first disaster was near Waterloo on the B., C. R. & N. road, while the second was near Oelwein. Near Denison, Texas, a freight train jumped the track and the engineer was killed.

The wreck on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railway was caused by the washing away of the foundation beneath the track, the rain falling at the time in torrents. There are indications that the rain had been preceded by a cloudburst, which had washed the earth from the track for a distance of half a mile. Being warned by a lurch of the engine of the impending disaster, the engineer and fireman jumped and escaped with slight bruises. The engine plowed its way into the earth, and lay in the ditch with the cars of the train piled upon it. The mail car was partially telescoped by the baggage car, which in turn penetrated the smoker. The rear end of the smoker rested on the roof of the passenger coach following, while the day coach and the sleeper had almost entirely telescoped each other. The sleeper in the rear escaped with much less injury.

News of the disaster was brought to Waterloo by two of the passengers who had escaped serious injury. Relief trains from there and from Cedar Rapids were quickly on the ground, and the injured passengers were soon extricated from the wreck and tenderly cared for until they were taken to the hospital at Cedar Rapids.

It was found that death had resulted in a short time in all but the case of David I. Hallo of Minneapolis, who lived until some hours after the accident. Mr. Hallo was on the way to Minneapolis to marry Miss Laura Morgenstern of that city, a niece of Admiral Schley. Many of the injured are in a serious condition, and fears are entertained that the list of dead will be added to.

CUBANS DIDN'T COME.

Only Seven Out of 4,317 on the Rolls Prove Their Claims for Money.

Although the American officers in Havana waited from early morning until into the evening Saturday to pay the $75 each to Cuban soldiers, only seven of the 4,317 men reported by the Cuban officers as composing the Fifth army corps proved their claims and not one of these surrendered arms. All receiving the money were camp followers, there being no fighters among them. Several others who applied could not show any connection with the army and were turned away. The total day's work was therefore the distribution of $525, with not a gun corralled. Gold and silver to the amount of $39,000 was ready and a strong guard of soldiers had been put about the paymaster's office to manage the expected crowd.

If the Cubans persist in this course the United States Government will be justified in holding that there is not and never was any Cuban army. Incidentally, the United States treasury will save the greater part of the $3,000,000 appropriated by Congress to pay this mythical army. The belief prevails that outside of Havana more men will take the money, as they are less under the influence of the agitators. Most Cubans look upon the turn of affairs rather as a defeat of Gomez than for the United States. Gomez feels his embarrassment poignantly, but still has hopes of being able to turn the tide.

WEST HAS SIX TORNADOES.

Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota Are Great Sufferers.

Sioux City was in the center of six tornadoes Tuesday night which did much damage in Iowa, South Dakota and Nebraska. One storm struck near Kingsley, Iowa, a second near Jefferson, S. D., and three across the Missouri river in northeastern Nebraska. One life is reported lost and several were injured.

A tornado swept over the northwest part of Mills County, Iowa, doing considerable damage to farm property and ruining crops. The house and barn and outbuildings of John Rohrburg, a prominent farmer living two miles north of Mineola, were totally destroyed, his little girl, aged 11 years, was killed, one of his boys had a leg broken and the balance of the family were more or less seriously injured. Barns and corn cribs were destroyed and farm implements scattered. A cyclone formed about three miles southwest of Kingsley, Iowa, and moved north about one mile, where it struck and demolished the large barn and outbuildings on the William Adams farm west of town. From this place it moved north to the farm owned by W. A. Stevens, where it demolished every building on the place. A family by the name of Johnson, who lived at this place, was saved by going into the cave.

In South Dakota the damage was all confined to the farms. No loss of life is believed to have occurred. The tornado, which swept through a thickly settled country, did not hit many farm houses, although it passed very close to many of them, their escape from destruction seeming almost miraculous.

There were three twisters in northeastern Nebraska. The storm that passed between Ponca and Newcastle followed along the ground for several miles before it broke up. John Wilber lost everything but his house. Charles Murfin's house and barn were wrecked. Samuel Green's barn was destroyed and Jacob Dennis lost both his house and barn. James Cone's house was totally destroyed. George Walbeck's barn was blown away. A second storm destroyed a great deal of property near Martinsburg and killed considerable live stock. A third wrecked a school house at Plainview and did other damage. North of Dixon, Neb., the tornado completely leveled all the buildings on several farms and badly injured others. Considerable live stock was killed and crops destroyed. The funnel-shaped clouds were seen by many persons, who hastily betook themselves to cellars.

NICARAGUA CANAL ESTIMATES.

State Department Gives Abstract of Commission's Report.

The State Department has made public an official abstract of the report of the Nicaraguan canal commission as presented by Admiral Walker, the head of the commission. It is understood to be the intention of the President to submit the full report to Congress at the beginning of the next session.

The report goes into minute details with respect to the construction of the canal, and says after mature deliberation the commission has adopted and estimated for the route from Brito to Lake Nicaragua, called Childs' route, and from the lake to Greytown, called Lull route. The line leaving Brito follows the left bank of the Rio Grande to near Bueno Retire, crosses the western divide to the valley of the Lajas, which it follows to Lake Nicaragua. Crossing the lake to the head of the San Juan river, it follows the upper river to near Boca San Carlos, thence, in excavation, by the left bank of the river to the San Juanillo, and across the low country to Greytown, passing to the northward of Lake Sillico. It requires but a single dam, with regulating works at both ends of the summit level.

To determine the proper unit of prices for excavation the average of prices actually paid to contractors on the Chicago drainage canal were taken. To these prices certain percentages were added for the difference in location, climate, etc. The commission believes that a canal can be built across the isthmus on this route for not exceeding $118,113,790.

NATIVES SEEK VENGEANCE.

Massacre and Pillage Follow Retirement of Otis' Army.

Massacre and pillage have followed the retirement of the United States army from villages captured during the present Philippine campaign. It was found impossible to leave garrisons at all the towns and withdrawal from many was necessary. In each case armed Filipinos have reoccupied the cities, their first acts being to punish all suspected of approving of American sovereignty. Friendly natives arriving in Manila from the country around San Isidro and San Miguel report that a reign of terror has prevailed since the American troops were withdrawn from those parts of the islands. The insurgents who are returning there deal vengeance upon those of their countrymen who showed any friendship toward the Americans during the latter's occupation of the territory.

The friendlies declare that unoffending people are being murdered daily, their houses burned and their property confiscated. Plenty of sympathizers with the insurrection remained during the Americans' stay and they have been reporting these instances of friendliness toward the United States troops. The refugees add that the inhabitants were badly oppressed by the native soldiers before the American occupation, but that their condition is worse now. Doubtless there is much truth in the reports, though such stories from Filipino sources are always magnified.

Omaha is enjoying a war of words over freight rates. The State Business Men's Association has taken up the complaint of the Norfolk Business Men's Association charging Nebraska roads with discrimination in freight rates and criticising the State Board of Arbitration.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Stockyards Company Organized at Indianapolis—Surprises Prisoners at Work on a Tunnel—$1,000,000 Estate Divided—Big Land Transfer.

The Interstate Stockyards Company, which proposes to build a second stockyards plant in Indianapolis, has been incorporated. The capital stock is $500,000 and is largely held by Daniel P. Erwin of Indianapolis and Frederick Squires of Boston. The project is the outgrowth of a long fight by some of the local stock dealers against what they call a trust operated in connection with the old stockyards. The new company announces that it will establish branch yards at several towns in Indiana and Illinois.

Jail Delivery Is Prevented.

An attempt at jail delivery was foiled by Sheriff Bradford of Marion, and his deputies the other night shortly after midnight. Three prisoners were found in the corridor engaged with a gas pipe in heating the stone in the floor and then dashing water on it, causing the stone to crumble. A hole nearly large enough to admit a man had been made over a tunnel passing under the jail from the boiler house to the court house.

THE DREADED HOUR.

There comes a day—God grant 'tis far away!
When one of us must go and one must stay.

When, face to face, to me no face appears,
One with eyes closed, the other's blind with tears.

When one, the other's form forever hid,
Must hear the earth fall on the coffin-lid;

When one must turn away, with anguish
moan,
And wander through the rest of life alone,

And feel, in agony of dumb despair,
Where'er it be, the loved one is not there;

While yet each joy and sorrow and regret
That once we knew we never can forget.

We know not whether 'twill be you or I
That shall be called to be the first to die;

We only know, whiche'er it be, dear wife,
Must from the living take the best of life.

A Man's Destiny.

"I HAVE something to tell you," said Richard Thorne, when the departure of her other callers had left him alone with his hostess.

"I thought there was something funny about," said Mrs. Vavasour, shading the firelight from her face with a screen of barbaric grandeur, while Thorne stared straight into the glow and bit at his straw-colored mustache.

"Out with it," encouraged Mrs. Vavasour, with a gleam of kindly amusement in her eyes.

"Well," said Richard Thorne, plainly pulling himself together, "it's come at last. I'm first officer no longer——"

"You've got a ship?"

"Yes, I've got a ship," he repeated after her slowly.

"My dear boy, I'm so glad," leaning forward a little in her armchair.

"I knew you would be," he said, smiling slightly, without raising his eyes.

"Of course I am. It is one of Donaldson's."

"Yes, Same line."

She watched him curiously in the silence that followed. They had been staunch friends, these two, as boy and girl, twenty years ago, and though he went to sea, and she married Tom Vavasour, they were still the same.

"You don't seem extravagantly elated, yourself," she hazarded presently.

"Don't I?" he answered aimlessly, giving his big shoulders a hitch in a second endeavor to recall his thoughts.

"No, you don't," sharply. "What is it?" kindly.

"Well, fact is, the new berth's on the Sydney and Vancouver trip. The other side of the world, you know," he explained.

"Of course I know. I need not be a sailor man with gold embroidery on my hat to know that."

Thorne laughed at the characteristic onslaught, and her face brightened in sympathy with his.

"But we won't lose you altogether?" she queried briskly. "Of course it would be much nicer if it were on the home trip, but we'll see you sometimes, won't we?"

"Oh, yes!" listlessly.

She shot a searching glance at him from behind her firescreen, and leaned her chin against its edge to gaze with puzzled eyes into the fire.

"Of course, you're awfully glad of the step?" she said, after a pause, and listened intently for his answer.

"Yes. Awfully—I suppose."

The response seemed satisfactory, and required a little cogitation before the next remark.

"Ah, well!" she went on, leaning far back in her chair, and turning her head in the shadow to watch him. "I shall lose a friend! You are sure to marry some one now you are in a position to do it."

"I shall marry nobody," said Thorne decidedly, laying his cap on a table beside him; and Mrs. Vavasour smiled triumphantly to herself as she heard, and watched the stubborn lines come about his mouth.

"Dear old simpleton," she thought, "he thinks he's betraying nothing."

Then came a silence, while Thorne began to bite moodily at his mustache once more, and while Mrs. Vavasour looked on with troubled sympathy in her bright eyes.

"Dick," she said suddenly, "tell me all about it. Who is she?"

"About what?" he asked, looking up quickly. "There isn't any—how on earth did you know?"

"You goose, you've been telling me for the last ten minutes."

"I? I never said——"

"I didn't say you said anything; all the same, you have been telling me. Go on now, I want to help you."

Her voice trembled as she spoke, and she stretched out a hand to him. He clasped it for a moment, while a look of perfect trust passed between them.

"Well, you see," he began awkwardly, looking into the fire once more, "I happen to know it was all her doing."

"What was?"

"This Vancouver business."

"Do explain a little."

"It was old Donaldson who told me—he had no right to, of course—when he offered me the ship, that she had suggested it to him."

"She? Who?"

"His daughter—Cicely, you know."

"Of course I know—he hasn't another. But what," in astonishment, "is that to mope about?"

"Don't you see? She has got me sent out of the country altogether."

"Nice, gracious spirit to take things in, upon my word!" commented his friend, with a suspicion of a sniff. "Might I ask what put that idea into your head?"

"Oh, there's another chap—chap with a title and money and things," vaguely. "Handsome chap, too," lugubriously.

"Did you make love to her?"

"No."

"Then what makes you——"

"She saw it coming, I suppose. I suppose I looked it."

There was a pause, during which they both looked into the glowing coals.

"Did you even make love—really—to a woman?" Mrs. Vavasour asked curiously.

"No," answered Thorne, with a shake of his head; and Mrs. Vavasour gave a little nod that said plainly, "I thought so!"

"And don't you think you are jumping to conclusions rather?" she asked.

"No." Thorne answered, shaking his head again, "he's a much more likely fellow to please her than I am, and 'twould avoid complications to keep me out of the way," he added bitterly, "for her father would quite possibly take my part."

"I think you are making her out as acting in an abominable manner," said Mrs. Vavasour, with spirit.

"Not at all," he rejoined quickly. "I dare say she's a little sorry for me, and besides she's procured me my captainship—hang it! All the pleasure's taken out of it!"

There was a long silence after this that was only broken at length by Mrs. Vavasour's rising suddenly and saying:

"Away with you, now; I must go and dress. Come and see me to-morrow at half-past 5—no, a quarter to 6. Now, don't forget."

"I won't forget," said Thorne, shaking hands, and going to the door.

"By the way, what's the other man's name?" she asked, as the friend's big figure was disappearing.

"Toler," he answered, turning round; he's a very decent fellow. I perfectly understand her—a—anyone preferring——"

"Yes. Good-by. But that's more than I do," she said aloud to herself as the door shut. "Dear old Dick's worth ten of him any day. Wait a while, my dear, I think I'll manage it."

As she went upstairs she met her husband.

"What, not dressed yet?" he asked, as he kissed her. "What have you been at now?"

"Thinking how I can make two people happy as we are," she answered.

"That's a big undertaking," said Tom Vavasour gravely.

The next day Thorne presented himself at 5:45 and asked for Mrs. Vavasour. He was shown upstairs immediately and greeted by the lady he sought, who crossed the room to meet him in a marvelous tea gown.

"You may shake my little finger," she said, holding it out to him, "the others have been eating buttered toast—at least, not exactly, but—you know what I mean."

"Perfectly," Thorne laughed, shaking the dainty finger between his strong finger and thumb.

"There are chairs to be had if you look hard enough for them," Mrs. Vavasour went on, peering round in the firelit autumn dusk that filled the room.

"Lots, thanks," said Thorne, seizing the nearest.

"Not that! It won't bear your big weight. Stir that fire up, Cicely, until I look for something made of iron."

A girl's figure bent forward at the far end of the room and stirred the coals into a bright blaze, and Thorne, who had jumped at the name, made a movement toward the door with a muttered excuse.

"Don't be absurd; it's too late now," said his hostess in a whisper that brought him to his senses. "Ah, that's just the thing," she went on aloud, pointing to a deep-backed armchair immediately opposite to the fire and leading the way toward it. "That's the worst of the modern drawing room," she continued, while Thorne bowed to Miss Donaldson and sat down; "if you have anything really comfortable it's sure not to be decent enough to put in it, and one never seriously thinks of buying anything for it but old-fashioned curly-legged things of stiff-necked generations long passed."

"I'm very comfortable," volunteered Thorne.

"So am I," put in Cicely, with a laugh.

"I'm delighted to hear it," said Mrs. Vavasour seriously, as if she had not been running on merely to guard against an awkward pause that had loomed ahead; "but I really think we have the only three sensible chairs in the room. Sugar and cream? Of course I remember."

Thorne drank his tea between the two women, wishing he were anywhere else, yet knowing he would rather be where he was while they talked across him. Presently Mrs. Vavasour turned to him and said, in her sweetest manner:

"What a good opportunity of thanking Miss Donaldson for putting that kindly spoke in your wheel! By the way, we must call you 'Captain' Thorne now, I suppose?"

Down went Thorne's teaspoon with a clatter, and one foot shot out in an instinctive impulse to kick his hostess' chair, to stand on her dainty toe, or anything that would stop her; and at the same time a suppressed little "Oh!" came from the other side of the fire. Mrs. Vavasour, however, apparently saw or heard nothing, and her next move sent Thorne's heart into his boots; for, standing up with a remark on the shortening evenings, she lit the gas bracket at her end of the chimney piece, and then, crossing in front of him, lit the other. Thorne felt his face was crimson, and with his eyes on his boots, cast about for words in which to couch an apology or an explanation; but before he could think of anything at all, the same voice had said more sweetly than ever:

"A thousand pardons, Cicely; you must let Dick entertain you for a minute. I heard Tom's voice downstairs, and I positively must see him about something."

There was a frou-frou of silk, and she was gone, without even looking back to see the two appealing glances that followed in her wake.

The two left alone, examined the interior of the fire with an intensity worthier of a loftier devotion. It began to dawn upon the man that the whole thing was planned and he gained something of oblivion to the position for a moment by forthwith giving his whole energy to the silent apostrophizing of meddling women—especially Mrs. Vavasour. But the present asserted itself again directly, and he cleared his throat to begin: "Of course, I'll say I adore the Pacific trip," he said to himself.

"Mrs. Vavasour's—a—remark just now," he began, "requires perhaps a little—a—explanation. What I had mentioned to her—a—about—you—I mentioned her only—I hope you will understand that—and did so—a——" (he wished she'd say something—anything) "—a—under peculiar circumstances."

"Very, I should think," the girl remarked, coldly; "though, indeed," correcting herself quickly, "I have no objection to all the world knowing one of my many suggestions to papa."

"Quite so. So I thought," agreed Thorne, losing his head.

"Then why apologize?"

"Why, indeed? But you will let me thank you, since I owe to—a—chance suggestion of yours my position."

"Quite a chance suggestion," heartily.

"Well, I ought to congratulate myself."

A silence while he leaned forward to trace an imaginary pattern with the toe of his boot, and she tied a ridiculous little handkerchief into a knot. Thorne wished that Mrs. Vavasour would return.

"The transpacific trip will be quite a pleasant change," he said with a barren enthusiasm, because he felt the strain of silence growing too great to be borne.

"Pacific? Are you——"

"Yes. My boat is one of the Sydney and Vancouvers, you know."

"I—I didn't know that."

A great wave of resentment swept over him. She either intended to deceive him, he thought, or else had not cared to what fever-stricken seas he was sent, so long as he was out of the way.

"You thought it was the China route?" he said, steadying his voice with an effort.

"No, I thought it was the home trip," the girl answered quietly.

"You did?" was all Thorne could say in a strange voice. For in a moment self-reproach and shame, in that he had taken an act of pure good nature as done to gain selfish ends alone, took the place of his resentment and filled his heart. Starting to his feet, he stood resting his elbow on the mantelpiece, looking down at the pretty brown head and long lashes that swept the flushed cheek, and his voice was deep and trembling when he spoke.

"Miss Donaldson, I must ask your forgiveness," said he, "for thinking—what I did."

Two beautiful, tearful eyes were raised in question to his, but only for an instant.

"I thought—I believed," he went on, determined to spare himself nothing, "that you had procured this foreign command for me—merely to free yourself from my attentions."

"But—how could you, when you had never—never paid me any attentions?" the girl faltered, with crimson cheeks.

"I know; but you must have seen it—seen that I love you more than all the world! I always felt I was unworthy of—of such a precious thing as your love—that I was not the sort of man—all my life has been at sea—that could make you happy. Now I am more unworthy than ever; I can never forgive myself for the injustice I have done you. Do not think too hardly of me. Good-by!"

She held out her hand to him, and pressing it passionately to his lips he hurried out from the room, and out of the house. And at the sound of the shutting of the door below, the girl waking as from a trance, buried her white face in her hands and sobbed aloud.

There was only one letter for Dick Thorne when he brought his vessel into Sydney harbor for the first time two months afterward, and that was only a few lines; but almost every word was underlined twice. And this was what it said:

"You great stupid—if you choose to throw away your own happiness and some one else's, in spite of all I can do, I can't help it. Come straight home by the next mail, and don't make a fool of yourself again. Yours, perfectly disgusted, MARY VAVASOUR."

And the next mail steamer carried a big, bronzed man, with a straw-colored mustache, who stood in the bows all day, and a part of the night, only coming aft to eat and sleep; "for," he told himself, "I'm a whole ship's length nearer to her than if I stayed on the poop."—Household Words.

GLADSTONE'S INTENSITY.

When a Schoolboy He Was Widely Known as a Prodigy.

Early in life Mr. Gladstone seems to have heeded the advice of the Hebrew preacher: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." An illustration of the gifted boy's intensity is told by an English writer in the account given by Dean Stanley of his first meeting Gladstone. The old Bishop of Norwich, having been pleased with some of his son's performances, said that as a reward he would take him to visit William Gladstone, the most extraordinary schoolboy who had ever been seen.

They went to the house where he was, and Arthur Stanley was sent out into the garden to make acquaintance with the prodigy, who was said to be sitting in a summer-house at the end of a walk. He went, and found Gladstone reading a book. As Stanley entered, Gladstone looked up and said, with great vehemence:

"Little boy, little boy, have you read Gray?"

Stanley, much startled, faltered out that he had not read Gray; to which Gladstone, with increased intensity of manner, replied, "Then you must read Gray!"

The same writer gives another illustration of Gladstone's doing with all his might whatever occupied his mind:

"Breakfasted with Mr. Gladstone. Huxley sat next him, and was cross-examined all the time about the horse, the mule and the donkey, which, in their Homeric setting, occupy the mind of the great man very much at present."

Big Violets.

Apparently it will soon be out of place to refer to—

A violet by a mossy stone

The Proper Income.

"What do you consider a sufficient income?" earnestly asked one club woman across the tea table the other day. "Always a little more than you have," flashed back the fair philosopher, with a smile.—Woman's Home Companion.

RUSSIA'S BIG ROAD.

GREAT TRANS-SIBERIAN RAILWAY SYSTEM.

When the Czar's Stupendous Project Is Completed Our Pacific Coast May Become More Important than the Atlantic.

The Russian minister of railroads is quoted in recent St. Petersburg dispatches as saying that there is no longer doubt that the trans-Siberian road will be finished next year and that when it is completed it will be possible to make the trip around the world in thirty-three days. In this same dispatch Bremen is taken for the European starting point, for the reason that it is reached by steamer from New York; thence the route indicated is from Bremen to St. Petersburg in one and a half days; St. Petersburg to Vladivostock, ten days; Vladivostock to San Francisco by steamer, four and one-half days; San Francisco to Chicago, three and one-half days; Chicago to New York, one day; New York to Bremen, seven days.

Should this longest railroad in the world be completed next year it will have been nine years in course of construction. The preliminary plan of its construction was outlined by the late Emperor Alexander III. of Russia in his rescript addressed in May, 1891, to the Czarowitz. Surveys were made for portions of this continuous trans-Siberian road in 1887-88. Designed to begin at Chelabinsk, near the boundary between European and Asiatic Russia, it was to end in Vladivostock on the Pacific ocean and, together with the system of Russian railroads, was destined for connecting the Baltic Sea with the Pacific. For the sake of facility of construction it was divided into seven lines under the following names, respectively: The Western Siberian Railroad, 885 miles; the Central Siberian, 1,149 miles; the Baikal Loop Line, 195 miles; the Trans-Baikal Railroad, 689 miles; the Amoor, 1,111 miles; the North Oussouri, 227 miles, and the South Oussouri, 252 miles. So that the total length of the railroad in Asiatic Russia was designed to be 4,507 miles, and the total distance from St. Petersburg to Vladivostock, or from the Baltic Sea to the Pacific, was estimated at 6,232 miles. This gigantic work has been prosecuted with marvelous vigor and steadiness and a year ago was declared to be nearing completion.

GREAT RAILWAY SYSTEM THAT RUSSIA IS BUILDING.

RAILWAY ACROSS THE STEPPES.

Changes in the Line.

Changes have been necessitated in the line by recent events in China—originally only one port on the Pacific was thought of, Vladivostock, and that was to be reached, first, by a northerly and then by a southerly bend entirely through Russian territory. But owing to interests obtained by Russia in Manchuria it was deemed inexpedient to follow the line as it was originally surveyed, and accordingly a new line direct from Irkutsk southwest to Vladivostock was adopted. Still more recent events in China have caused another change in the main line to be made, and in consequence not Vladivostock but Port Arthur will be the terminus on the Pacific. So that the trans-Siberian Railroad divides into three prongs as near approach is made to the Pacific. One prong goes straight on to Vladivostock, another strikes down through Manchuria and a third bears in a southerly direction down to Port Arthur. Either of these latter is a shorter cut to the sea by several hundred miles, the Port Arthur route being the shortest of the three. Vladivostock is not to be abandoned; it will have its railroad and be made in consequence a commercial place of importance, but it has the disadvantage of being during one-half the year under snow and ice. Port Arthur is open the year round. But this latter port is in China and before Russia decided to extend its trans-Siberian Railroad thither Russia must have come to a satisfactory understanding with China. Within the present year, then, St. Petersburg will be connected by rail not only with Vladivostock, but with Port Arthur, and probably within next year by branch roads with Canton and Pekin.

It is estimated that after the road is repaired after the first few years of traffic the journey from St. Petersburg to Pekin will be made in five days. From London the most important harbor on the Japan Sea will be seventeen and a half days. It is now possible by the "North Express" to go from London to St. Petersburg in two days and four hours. It will therefore be possible to reach Pekin from London in seven or eight days. But this in the future. While the road is new and stiff the speed at which the trains will run will not be greater than twenty miles an hour, but even so it will be possible to go from London to Japan in sixteen days and to China in seventeen days. The shortest cut at present from London to those countries is across the Atlantic, across the United States or Canada and across the Pacific, and with the best of luck it takes from thirty to thirty-five days to make it. At first thought this promised shortening of the time would seem to bode anything but good to the transcontinental traffic of the United States and Canada which has been heretofore afforded by England in her commerce with Asiatic countries. But the intense rivalry existing between England and Russia is to be taken into account. The trans-Siberian road will not be extensively patronized by England—it will be supported by Russian traffic and, in a degree, by German. Time, it is true, is a valuable element in commerce, but it will be lost sight of by the English while pushing their own interests in opposition to those of their most dangerous rival. England, at any rate until the Nicaraguan canal is constructed, will continue to support the Canadian Pacific Railroad by her shipments, and at the same time and from the same source the transcontinental lines within the United States will have each a share of benefits.

Course of Empire Turned Back.

It is for other reasons not to be feared that the course of commerce—of empire—will be changed, turned back on itself, and made to move toward the east. It has ever been westward going, and there is every reason to believe that it will continue in that direction. Civilization, so far as we know, began in the Euphrates valley, moved to the Nile valley, and then to the east end of the Mediterranean. Rome took it up and spread it entirely around the Mediterranean, and afterward it drifted out into the Atlantic. There was never any change or shadow of turning in the course civilization would pursue in its march over the world. Meanwhile eastern trade was had by the advancing nations—first Venice possessed it, then Spain and Portugal, and next Holland and England. Venice ceased as a world power, and her successors to the trade of the Orient, while continuing in the rich traffic, looked ever out toward the west. At length nations surrendered that trade to commercial companies, and themselves sought more and more to discover and occupy new lands in the distant west. Exactly three centuries ago England incorporated the East India company, when England was engaged in making conquests on the American continent. "Westward the course of empire takes its way." It was pursuing that course when it left the Atlantic States of this republic and made its way over the Alleghenies and into the Mississippi valley. Again it was pursuing that course when, in 1849-50, the Pacific coast was reached, and the intermediate country began to be occupied by intelligent people. Our interest in "empire" is, or was until recently, limited to these United States. How far that interest may extend and how permanently nobody just now can say. But it is absolutely certain that the part the United States are to have in the trade and commerce of the beyond—of all the Asiatic countries—is to be immense and soon to be realized. The completion of the trans-Siberian railroad is an event of the greatest significance to this country. It means, first, that Siberia, a country as large as all North America and about as diversified as respects climate and soil and general fertility as large portions of North America, will be filled up with industrious people, and that before the twentieth century is half out all Asia will be teeming with new life and sharing modern prosperity. Secondly, it means that the United States will then exchange products on a large scale with Siberia, China and every other country in that quarter of the globe. Then the Pacific Ocean will be white with steam and sail, as the Atlantic now is—and our Pacific States will be populated perhaps not less densely than Japan. The civilization on the Pacific coast will be the best on this continent, and the splendor of its trading and commercial achievements will eclipse anything that has been known in the past on the eastern side of this continent. Only—the United States hesitates to face about and face the Pacific and the Orient.

Such sections of the Siberian railroad as are being operated are reported to be earning operating expenses. The first, or western, section earned expenses the first year, which was 1894. It carried of first, second, third and fourth class passengers 152,315. It brought 189,606 settlers into the country, besides 33,000 workmen and 2,258 convicts. In 1896 the connecting, or Omsk-Obi, section carried into the country 37,500 passengers of the different classes and 116,026 settlers. In 1896 on the third section, the Chelabinsk,, were carried 23,768 passengers and 3,072 settlers. That was thought to be a good beginning, but it is stated that since 1896, the road having been enormously extended and old stations improved and new stations established, the passenger business has largely increased. Official tables are not at hand, but it is believed that during the last two years not less than 350,000 emigrants have arrived in Siberia. From all accounts the most of them are contented and doing fairly well. The total receipts last year for transportation of passengers and freights were upward of $3,500,000. These figures will serve to change the ideas many hold of that country. Siberia has ever been regarded as a frozen waste, uninhabited except by exiles and quite uninhabitable. A country that can furnish such an amount of business to a new railroad is plainly something very different from that.

When the road is completed the passenger business will be largely increased, for the way passenger traffic will increase, and it is certain that thousands every year will prefer to go all-rail around the world, especially as that way it is cheaper and quicker. Tickets from Warsaw to Vladivostock cost 120 rubles, or $82.40. From London to Vladivostock the cost of a ticket is $119, first-class; a second-class ticket is considerably cheaper. A Chicago person knowing the fare to New York and London can easily calculate the cost of transportation from his city through Europe to Vladivostock. The price of a first-class ticket by the Suez canal to Japan is $428. Add the price of sleeping berth, twelve nights, by the Siberian route, and still there is a saving of $190. It is estimated that 160,000 first-class passengers will use the new route annually. Expectations equally high are entertained of the freight traffic. Goods going over the road to the east and those coming west will be those that can pay the highest rates, such as furs, gold, silver, platinum and tea. As the estimated cost of building and equipping the road is $160,000,000, the highest earnings it may be capable of will be needed to pay a profit on the investment. But as the road is owned by the Russian Government and as above all things a military road, pecuniary profits are not what are mainly sought.

Many Branch Roads.

From almost the first the activity of the Russians in Siberia has not been confined to building the main line. Branch roads were early contemplated and some of them are completed. The Russian railroad from Ekatrinburg to the navigable part of the Dwina is nearly completed and the products of Siberia will thus have an important outlet to the White Sea, and hand in hand with the building of the main Siberian water ways connecting with the railroad is progressing, and surveys are preparing for the building of branch roads to all the more important towns of the various provinces and to the mining districts. Few of these branches will be built, however, until the trunk line is completed, for most of the energy and money will be devoted to the main road until the great project is an accomplished fact.

An enormous part of the country that is tributary to the Siberian Railroad is amply blessed by nature and is capable of supporting an enormous population. This road will be the main factor in the next century in the development of an important fraction of the earth's surface. We have only to glance over the list of the projected lines connecting the Siberian road with China to get an idea of the immense influence which Russia is certain to wield over all the interests of Eastern Asia.

AROUND THE WORLD IN THIRTY-THREE DAYS.

No Wonder It Pained.

A tender-hearted old woman noticed a horse with a broad rubber band stretched around its leg just above the hoof. She asked the waiting driver of the cab why it was there and suggested that it was more than cruel to place it on the animal.

"Yes, mum," replied the cabby, "it's painful to the horse no doubt, but that's not the worst of it. It's the getting of it on that pains the poor thing. Why, we had to stretch the band and draw it over the horse's head and down all his body to get it on."

"For the land's sake alive!" exclaimed the old woman, and walked away horrified.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

TALKS ON ADVERTISING

When the small merchant listens for the first time to the advertising man's proposition, he seems to regard it vaguely. He doesn't stop to think that he is merely a medium between the sales counters and public audience of thousands of readers. After a while he may become interested enough to say, "I believe in judicious advertising." Then the advertising man knows that his vis-a-vis never advertised in his life, knows nothing about it, and he realizes that he is up against an iceberg. He has perhaps felt when he entered that particular store that the atmosphere was frozen hard. He had already sized up the merchant sitting at his desk, and from the cut of his jib, thought there was nothing in him. His impressions had not been favorable the first dash out of the box and first impressions are most always good ones. He wonders if he can ever thaw this merchant out, and somehow wishes he hadn't walked a dozen blocks out of his way to see this man, but had instead gone to the lunch he missed. Then he begins to get hot under the collar, but he won't show it, and he goes for the merchant red-handed, knowing he is offering a good thing.

"You put these price tags on your goods to attract attention, don't you?" he asks of the merchant. "Of course, where should I put them, in the back yard?" he answered. The advertising man thinks this reply a little rough; still it wasn't much rougher than the question, for couldn't he see that the cards were there for no other purpose? "Right where they are," he says, "that is the proper thing to do. There are merchants who get price cards on the brain and don't stop to think that nobody sees them unless they happen to come into the store. They forget that the shopper at her home, the banker at his desk, or the workingman at his fireside, smoking his pipe, is reading one of the daily papers and not worrying about price cards. They are a good advertisement, after you have attracted your buyer into your store, but they are not gilt-edged magnets to get people to come in. Great guns! the way to make money is to get people to come into your place, isn't it?"

"Yes," says the merchant, "but my neighbor So-and-so on the corner, and So-and-so next door, take whole pages in the papers. They attract the people to this street, and when they get here, they see my bargains, and I get the trade without spending money in the newspapers."

Now here was a merchant who clearly kept his eye on the main chance. By his own words, he was getting his trade at the expense of his neighbor.

But was he getting it?

He had started in business about the same time as either of his neighbors and on the same scale. There was no evidence that during his ten years' career, he had added one inch of floor or counter space. His work was beginning to sprinkle his hair with gray threads, and he looked like a man who eked out an annual profit about equal to a first-class head-salesman's salary in either of his neighbor's stores. Clearly, he had not accumulated a fortune. One of his neighbor's stores now occupied four floors and workmen were tearing down walls alongside to take in a favorable corner to still further provide for a growing business. The other neighbor was rated A1 in the commercial agencies and employed fifty clerks and salesmen. They had been persistent advertisers—he hadn't.

Somehow the advertising man was disgusted because this merchant wouldn't get sociable, and because he talked in that strain. He knew he had a good proposition to offer, and he knew he could help that merchant build up a fine trade, but he felt discouraged at sowing the advertising seed on such barren ground. While he would have liked to take that merchant's contract for 25,000 lines, knowing that his newspaper would be of great benefit to him, he felt that his paper could get along without it if the merchant could.

They talked and talked—that is, the advertising man did—and then he said he would have to go, that he would drop in to see him. Of course that was sarcasm. If he were to go past that store every day for a year, he wouldn't drop in to see him, and very likely that merchant wouldn't miss him. But some day the merchant would begin to see that the neighbors' pages of advertising didn't attract trade anywhere but where it belonged; and that still more buildings were being demolished to make more room for his neighbors' increasing trade. Then he would begin to hump himself, and the words of the advertising man would come back to him. Then he would thaw out and strive to get into the bandwagon hard and fast along side his prosperous neighbors, and the advertising man would be vindicated.

Don't you think so?

Silence is not always golden and the merchant who thinks so, and doesn't herald his goods in printers' ink is dense. He can't be a hermit and compete with his neighbors. No matter what his line of goods, he can sell more of them if he advertises.—San Diego Tribune.

A Former DeKalb Co. Physician Passes Away.

[Fort Wayne Journal]

Friends of Dr. Thomas Johnson Dills formerly of this city, will be grieved to learn of the sad death of that eminent physician at Pomona, California, Saturday. Death was due to consumption.

Dr. Dills had been in ill health for a number of years, and left Fort Wayne in search of a better climate in an endeavor to relieve himself of the dreaded disease. He went to California, and for a while improved. He visited Fort Wayne, the last time, about two years ago, and since his return to California, his strength has gradually failed.

Dr. Dills was noted as a specialist in the diseases of the eye and ear. He was a native of Indiana, born at Spencerville, DeKalb county, August 10, 1847, son of Jacob Dills, who was born in 1800. The ancestors of Dr. Dills immigrated from Holland and settled in New Jersey and on Long Island as early as 1740. His paternal grandfather entertained General Washington and staff at his home in New Jersey, during the war of the revolution. The family removed to Indiana as early as 1820.

Dr. Dills was the youngest of ten children. At fifteen years of age he entered Otterbein University, remaining two years and a half, and then engaged in teaching school. In 1867 he began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. W. D. Meyers, and the next year entered the Univerity of Michigan, where he was graduated in 1871. His first practice was at Avilla, and after a year there he came to Fort Wayne. In 1873 he attended Bellevue hospital, and again went to New York, and for two years studied the diseases of the eye and ear. He spent some time in Europe in 1883, to perfect his studies. In the practice of his profession he was eminently successful. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, Episcopal church and the democratic party. He was married in 1878 to Lizzie Appletomb, who died in 1880, and he was married in 1883 to Mabel Horton, of Fort Wayne. His widow and three children survive him. His second wife is a sister of Mrs. R. G. Thompson, of this city.

Lively Children.

Chilren are pretty lively sometimes. An instance or two occurred at St. Joe at the S. S. Convention the other day. Miss Addie Widney had her infant class as mentioned yesterday in the COURIER and was giving a regular, everyday working lesson for their benefit and the benefit of those present. She was asking them as to how this especial lesson should be treated and in what spirit it should be studied, as it was the sad chapter on the crucifixion. She said:

"Now children, if you should go home and some one met you at the door and told you your ma was sick would you go off screaming and yelling?" "No," said a little tot, "I'd cry."

Soon after, she asked them about the division of Christ's garments at the Crucifixion, and added, "What is meant by 'casting lots?'" A little boy cried out "They gambled with beans." "How?" asked the teacher. "Why" replied the child, "They took a lot of white and black ones, and the one who got a black bean got His coat."

Close Call

[Albion Democrat]

Lightning struck a cherry tree directly across from the residence of J. J. Trumbo of Jefferson township early last Saturday morning. Mr. Trumbo had but a few minutes previously been under the tree feeding his hogs and had just gone across the road when the crash came and shattered the tree scattering it in all directions. A sow and six pigs and three sheep were killed outright, while six other sheep were also injured. Mr. Trumbo was stunned for a few moments. It was lucky for him that he was not under the tree when the thunderbolt struck it, as there was no question but what he would have been killed.

Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident, of which Mr. John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters;' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50cts., guaranteed, at H B. McCord's Drugstore.

QUEER WILL

Arranges to Have His Brother Marry His Wife.

The will of Sam T. Jack, the theatrical manager, well known in New York and Chicago, was filed for probate yesterday. One of the clauses therein reads:

"It is my wish, first and foremost, that my brother James and my wife, Emma, become husband and wife."

It was said that he consulted with his wife and his brother with reference to their future, and the clause would not have been inserted in the will had it not been agreeable to both.

Mabel Hazleton, Mr. Jack's daughter, is not mentioned in the will, but before his death Mr. Jack obtained his brother's promise that he would look after the child and provide for her as if she were his own. James Jack will at once take out adoption papers for the girl, and send her to his home in Oil City, Pa. Mr. Jack executed his will a few hours before he died. He appoints therein that his brother continue his business and gives him the leases of his New York and Chicago theaters, all his theatrical property and the exclusive right to use his name. The estate is estimated at $250,000. One third is bequeathed to his wife, one-third to his brother and the remaining one-third equally between his mother and father, who reside in Oil City Pa.; his sister, Rebecca Clark, and several nephews and nieces.

COURT NEWS

Monday's Daily.

The hog case against the railroad Co. went in favor of the Company, though there are answers to a lot of interrogatories, that may somewhat mody the case, as we understand it.

Judge Woodhull has taken Judge Hartman's place to try the case which came up today, White vs the Garrett Gas Engine Co., as Judge Hartman had been an attorney in the case.

Tuesday's Daily.

As noted in brief yesterday, the case against the Garrett Gas Engine Co. is up for trial with J. A. Woodhull as special judge.

The real title is Warren E. White vs The Boiler and Garrett Machine Works.

It appears that White invented the Gas Engine they are making and for some time worked for the company that was formed. There was a contract that he should have $15 a week while he was working for them and was to be a stockholder. He was to furnish drawings and patterns and direct the work. After a time he left them with the understanding that he was to have an allowance or royalty on each machine they made. But this royalty was not paid and he now sues for it. The company deny that they owe him anything. They say he did not leave a perfected machine or invention for them to follow, but that he should have remained with them and help to make it a success. These points seem to be about what causes the trouble, though it appears that the company has gone on making successful engines. White's attorneys are Baxter & Brown of Auburn and Senator Ellison of Fort Wayne. The attorneys for the company are Judge Roby of this place and Myers & Mountz of Garrett. The case promises to be a hotly contested one.

CLUB NOTES

The L. L. C. met with Mrs. Ford last Saturday. A fair number was in attendance. An excellent program was rapidly all who came. New Mexico and Arizona was the topic under consideration. Mrs. Zimmerman had a paper on this which she sent to the club and was read by Mrs. Barns, the former being kept at home by illness, Her work included a description of the "Painted Desert of Arizona." Mrs. Lewis brought an excellent article on Arizona also, Miss Margaret Buckley gave an interesting account of the inhabitants and their occupation. Miss Hague gave her work "Across the Rockies" which belonged to Utah day, but being absent from home at that time gave it as back work. Mrs. Mollie Robbins also gave back work—China Town in San Francisco which was a bright and interesting paper having gleaned much of her information from Auburn citizens who had visited that undesirable place. Mrs. Swineford was asked to give some reminiscenses of her visit to China Town, which she made in company with her husband several years ago. Her account added information, but gave no better impression of the opium dens and other evil places that are allowed to exist any where, but as in the other case, left the impression that these opiums dens are places that leave no pleasant memories on the minds of visitors. It is strange that a civilized community is so careless in its tastes as the city of the Golden Gate is said to be.

The club also voted to send at its expense, such books as are donated by the members to the ladies' club in Dakota. These ladies are struggling to miantain in that new state, a club similar those in Indiana whereby a higher education and a literary training may be secured.

After current items and critics report, the club adjourned to meet with Mrs. Lackey Saturday.

Obituary of Melvin Tarney

Again the uncertainty of life has been brought before us in the sudden death of Madison Melvin Tarney, which occurred early Saturday morning of June 3, 1899, from paralysis of the heart. Melvin was the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Simeon Tarney, living on South Main-st. He was born on the old home stead, farm of Samuel Tarney in Jackson township, Ind., on the 8th of April 1865. He moved with his parents to Auburn in 1870, where he has since lived. He attended the Auburn school until young manhood. After quitting school he worked with his father in the butchering business until his father retired from the business. For the last year he has been in the employ of our townsman and butcher, Mr. C. W. McNabb, who says that he was a skilled workman, always finding him honest, industrious and pleasant to his patrons. He always had great respect for his parents, never speaking unkindly to them. On the 20th of Oct. 1896 he was united in marriage to Miss Elmira Harris, by Rev. J. D. Brosy of Auburn. Melvin departed this life at the age of 34 years 2 months and 24 days. He leaves to mourn his death, a wife, father, mother, 1 brother and 1 sister, besides many other relatives. The funeral service was conducted from the residence on South VanBuren-st, Sabbath June 4, at 4:30 p. m. Interment took place in Woodlawn cemetery. Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating.

On the 6th of March he was united in marriage to Miss Miranda Moody; to this union were born six children, three sons and three daughters, all of whom are still living. Mr. Walter was the 7th of 14 children, two having preceded him tn the spirit world. Several years ago he was elected to the office of trustee of Jackson township, in which capacity he served one term. Mr. Walter united with the A. O.U.W. of which order he was a member at the time of his death. He possessed a jolly and cheerful disposition, which is always admired in any life. BUTLER.

Brother Downey's daily is meeting with a cordial welcome by our people. and if he can stand the expense of placing such a neat little daily in our homes for one cent a day I believe a large majority of our citizens can do so.

J. A. Campbell has sold his south side residence to Charles Alwood.

Severe storms and considerable damage therefrom is reported from a few miles north of Butler.

Dr. Madden remains nearly the same as reported recently. He is possibly losning vitality.

Our streets were overflowing last Saturday, and Saturday night. Our merchants report a good trade.

The Butler delegates to the county Sunday school convention report a very enjoyable time and are loud in the praise of the sociability and hospitality of the good people of St. Joe.

A great many fishing outfits pass our place on their way to the lakes of Steuben County. Their return generally betokens disappointment. The cheapest fish are caught after sunset with the fraction of a days wages, but then where will the fun and excitement of a good "bite," come in.

M. F. Campbell and his Auburn parter are having quite a good success working the Prudential Life Insurance Company.

Alex. Earlston's house at Hamilton was struck by lightning in the recent severe storms. Damage small. Insured.

The large barn on the Musser farm 1 mile south of Hamilton burned last Sunday night, with some contents; cause unknown. Fully insured in the Farmers Mutual.

Ed Showalter and Jasper Hart are having 'a time," agreeing upon the value of a garden on the premises purchased by Mr. Showalter on east North street.

A Summer in the North.

Supt. Coe Re-elected.

At 10 a. m. today, Mr. Coe was re-elected, and will succeed himself as county superintendent. W. S. Dancer was made chairman of the meeting and Auditor Seiler was ex-officio, its secretary. But one name was presented, and no one would have voted against Mr. Coe, we believe. It was a solid vote of 14. This is as it should be, and as the COURIER has earnestly advocated. Mr. Coe has succeeded in his difficult and often delicate duties, and there was no better way to reward him than by such a vote of confidence. He goes in four years, a change due to a new law and a very wise change, in our opinion.

Dear Sir:—I was afflicted with that common scourge—"Lagrippe," and had violent paroxisms of coughing from which I could get no relief until upon the recommendation of Rev. E, L. I have taken two bottles and now consider myself cured, and I always recommend it to all my friends who are similarly afflicted, for I know it to be good. Very truly yours,

POLITICS OF THE DAY

ISSUES NEXT YEAR.

Discussion as to what the dominant issue will be during the campaign of 1900 is attracting more or less attention from editors and politicians just now. There can be no harm in discussing this matter, but it is not at all likely that the issues can be made up with any degree of certainty before the time for conflict arises. In this city not long ago William J. Bryan reiterated his belief that the Democratic national convention will "reaffirm the Chicago platform." "But," he added, "no man has a right at this time to say what the Democratic platform will be. You do not know what the next twelve months will bring forth." And when asked, "Will free silver be the dominant issue in the next campaign?" he replied: "It is altogether too early to say what will be the dominant issue, but whatever the issue is the Democratic party will meet it squarely."

When the combat opens the dominant issue will be that which is nearest to the people. It will be the question of immediate importance. It will not be a matter of ancient history, nor will it be an academic theory. It will be a live question. The currency question is important, but there are other questions which may prove of more instant and vital import. The Republicans may force the money matter to the front by attempting to secure gold legislation in the next Congress, but such action is extremely problematical. Imperialism may have run its course before the Presidential campaign begins, or it may have developed into a burning issue. But the trusts will be in evidence, stronger, more dangerous, more insolent than ever.

The Republican party may endeavor to fool the people with a paltering pledge to oppose trusts, but this scheme will not work, and it is quite likely that one of the dormant questions before the people in 1900 will be that concerning the trusts.—Chicago Democrat.

"Currency Reform."

After much tribulation the House Republican Commitee has, it is alleged, brought forth a scheme of currency "reform." This scheme is not so broad, nor so long as that devised by the Indianapolis "sound" money convention. It is a compromise and it will satisfy nobody. Briefly summarized, it is as follows:

"The redemption of all obligations of the government in gold on demand. Greenbacks, when once redeemed for gold, to be reissued only for gold. Permitting national banks to issue notes to the par value of their government bonds deposited in the treasury, instead of 90 per cent., as at present. Permitting the minimum capital of national banks to be $25,000, instead of $50,000, as at present."

There is nothing in this about making silver dollars redeemable in gold, nor is there a suggestion of making all the outstanding obligations of this nation gold obligations. Neither is there a hint of placing the issuing of paper money entirely in the hands of the banks. It seems that the House Republican caucus committee was not prepared to approve "wild cat" money secured only by the office furniture of the banking houses. It must not be concluded, however, that the schemes of the money power to place the gold standard absolutely in power will be abandoned. The plan suggested by the caucus is simply an "entering wedge." Later on stronger methods will be advocated. If the Republicans remain in power the "wild cat" money scheme will be urged, and if the House and Senate can be controlled such a plan will finally be put into execution. The only hope for the people to escape slavery to the money power rests in the success of Democracy.

Expansion and Taxation.

The people, on account of this expansion policy, are paying war taxes in time of peace at the rate of half a million a day, but these revenues will barely suffice to meet the expenditures and additional taxation will beconie necessary if the policy of the administration is maintained. Instead of assisting the Filipinos to attain self-government, instead of keeping the promises made to them a year ago, when they fought side by side with our army against the common enemy, a war is being carried on for their subjugation, thereby bringing shame and disgrace upon the American people and their boasted love for liberty.—Denver Post.

Seditions Talk.

Some American "Loyalists" in Cienfuegos seem to be getting a little fast. "Much excited talk" is reported among them, and Maj. Dempsey is said to "fear a demonstration" on their part by reason of their indignation "due apparently to nothing more than the talk of the Cuban agitators in favor of independence." If the Cubans have not a right to "talk in favor" of their independence to which Congress solemnly pledged itself and the American people little more than a year ago, it would be strange indeed.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

Too Late in Any Event.

It would therefore appear that it would be good politics on the side of the administration not to let too long a time elapse between peace "with honor and glory," and the opening of the next Presidential campaign. It would be a smart stroke to end the war just far enough in advance of the next Presidential election for Mr. McKinley to reap the benefits of the honor and glory of peace, but too late for sober thought on the part of the masses to affect the result.—Richmond Dispatch.

What Is Glory?

Of what concern is it to us how the Philippines govern themselves and of what benefit can it be to the people of this country to rule over foreign and alien races? It is said it will cost $100,000,000 a year to maintain our sovereignty over those islands, and all for what? Nothing at all, except for the "glory" of it and the making of a few men rich who wish to lay cables and build battleships. If men must be enriched at the expense of the Government it is far better to award them contracts for internal improvements, and the money will then at least be kept at home. And as for "glory," which is the more glorious—to stand for peace and justice in the world or to engage in this "destiny" business of slaughtering and despoiling helpless and distant peoples?—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Tinkering the Currency.

Just in what shape the currency question will come before the next Congress is not yet determined by the Republican "reformers." That matter will be governed largely by political considerations. McKinley wants to be renominated, and, of course, hopes to be re-elected President. The St. Louis Republican platform pledged him to bimetallism. His party has been doing all it could to secure gold monometallism. The currency tinkers at Atlantic City have evolved a scheme which will contract the currency by impounding all the greenbacks paid into the national treasury, and which are not to be paid out except for gold.

But the business of the country will not patiently endure a contraction of the currency. The tinkers know this and have suggested that the national banks be allowed to issue notes to the full value of the bonds deposited to secure such issue, instead of 90 per cent. only, as at present. Another sugestion is to allow the establishing of new national banks with a minimum capital of $25,000 instead of the $50,000 now required.

But all these propositions may be disregarded by Congress, as the main thing is to boom McKinley, who has no earnest convictions whatever on the money question.

McKinley Out for Votes.

The President has a right to pay a visit to the West if he wishes to do so, and his friends have a right to pretend that his visit is for some other than its real purpose, but the more they pretend, the more general will be the conviction that they are only pretending. As the days go on the chances for electing a Democratic President appear to be improving, and the brightening of the Democratic prospect is not a good omen, as the President sees it. It is understood that Mark Hanna expects that some Eastern States that went for McKinley in 1896 will go against him in 1900, and it is necessary that the loss should be made good through the recovery of some of the Western States that voted against McKinley three years ago. It is easy to understand why a difficult and delicate task of this nature should be intrusted to the President himself, and this has led to the projecting of the Western trip that is to have no politics in it.—Binghamton Leader.

On Dangerous Ground.

Imperialism places itself above the constitution and ignores it as the trusts and combines ignore the laws whenever they come in conflict with their designs. This is imperialism of the most dangerous kind and unless the people wake up and manfully do battle for the rights guaranteed to them by the fundamental law of the land there will be no end to the assumption of power by an administration which has already gone so far outside of the law. The matter is deserving of the most serious consideration of all fair-minded, liberty-loving people who do not want to see constitutional government displaced by the absolute power of imperialism. The administration is venturing on dangerous ground when in its mad desire for supremacy it annuls the fundamental law of the land.—Denver Post.

Aliens or Rebels?

The Federal immigration commissioner at San Francisco has forbidden ten Filipinos to land, on the ground that they are alien contract laborers. This should make a test question for the United States Supreme Court to settle. If the people of the Philippines are aliens, then those of them in arms against the United States certainly cannot be rebels. And if they are not aliens, then of course they are United States citizens, and entitled to the privilege of moving to and fro throughout the territory of the United States and getting work where they can find it.—Springfield Republican.

A Hopeless Job.

It is going to be a mighty awkward job to conduct an anti-trust campaign with the Honorable William McKinley and the Honorable John W. Griggs sitting on the safety valve. The American people are easily led by the nose, as the Honorable John R. Tanner knows to his profit, but we greatly doubt whether they are so gullible as to accept as apostles of the anti-trust crusade the very men who are openly and notoriously the beneficiaries, apologists and obedient servants of every trust, combine and monopoly in the country.—Chicago Chronicle.

Times and Names Change.

Three years ago the Republican organs were holding up as models of patriotism and loyalty the same men who are now denounced by the same organs as "copperheads" and "traitors." For example—Laughlin, Rogers, Hoar, Atkinson, Boutwell and hundreds of others.—Omaha World-Herald.

Philosopher McKinley.

The fact is that President McKinley is a rare man. He is a philosopher. If anything real troublesome comes up he refers it to a commission and discharges it from his mind, and is as happy as the man who thought he had got rid of a debt by giving a note for the amount he owed.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Because They Are "Agin" It.

The announcement of Mr. Bryan that the Democratic organization in the Eastern States is in the hands of believers in the Chicago platform has proven very hurtful to the feelings of the Republican editors. How is it that the truth causes Republican editors to squirm?—Atlanta Constitution.

HEAVY ON THE PURSE

SUMMER COSTUMING CALLS FOR LARGE OUTLAY.

Insistent Demand for Novelty and Variety Is the Cause—Little Uniformity in Making Up at Present—Up-to-Date Summer Girls.

New York correspondence:

NEW standards that bring an insistent demand for variety are putting stylish women to big outlay for summer dresses. Naturally, too, women who are forever imitating fashionables to the limit of their purses find that sort of copying more difficult and costly than usual. As summer approaches the demand for variety is strongest in wash dresses of tailor finish. One beruffled and gauzy dress will serve far better than will only one tailor rig. Consequently even the women who have to govern their plans closely according to their means are reenforcing their stocks of tailor suits. Denim, crash or linen, and duck or pique constitute the usual range of goods, though white linen runs duck and pique hard.

As to the method of making, there is as little uniformity as possible. Because of the high value put on novelties, there is a fine showing of them, most of them ingenious, and what is more, tasteful. The accompanying pictures are eloquent of faithful endeavor on the part of designers, and are fairly representative of the best that is new in simple summer gowns. Each is described in the goods in which it was sketched, but most of them may be reproduced in any of the mentioned stuffs. The first model was in white linen. The material was carefully shrunk first, and then the gown was sponged after making so that the last shrinking was part of the fit. This is a trick long practiced by high priced dressmakers and tailors for their fine cloth gowns. The gown was finished by stitching in white silk. The jacket went over a fitted waistcoat, under which was worn a loose white silk shirt.

Cotton coverts are much used for the wash tailormades, and small wonder, so attractive are they in appearance and price. The new name sounds a little better than the old one of denim, though the two mean practically the same thing, the new weave being, perhaps, a bit finer. The second of these gowns was in heavy blue cotton covert. It was stitched with white and was made with all the care and exactness that would be bestowed on cloth. Its jacket was especially clever as a compromise with the sheath back. Such a jacket may be made to go with every propriety over a white duck skirt and bodice. In this case the jacket was a bodice, which was proved by the close sleeves. Away with economy! A front of white was set in.

The shirt waist costume appeared a season or so ago and scored an instant success. Such are to be much worn this season, and the newest ones are considerably elaborated when compared with the originals. Of course, the perfectly severe shirt waist, with linen stock and scarf to match the waist, is to be worn with a severe skirt to match, but some of these suits go away beyond such simplicity. One of the up-to-date sort is sketched. It was in polka dot pique, white ground and red dots. This was made up with an overdress of heavy white lawn, and the shirt waist of lawn with finishings of the dotted stuff. A linen collar and scarlet tie completed the rig. It seems an odd combination of materials, but dressmakers are using cloth bands for trimming taffeta dresses, and odd combinations are the rule.

By the latter combination dresses of summer silk are made to look a bit as if the tailor had his hand in them. The last of these three dresses was of this sort, the goods being an India silk of ragged-robin blue ground figured with lilac, a very recent combination of color. It was trimmed elaborately with bands of lilac cloth stitched with black. One may not like the idea, but if she carry it out she may be sure that no one will suspect her of a last year's gown. In this bodice there was a very elaborate management of the shield or straight front idea. It is much more difficult to accomplish this flat front in wash goods than in elastic cloth, but makers are trying to compromise. A wash silk dress is a wise provision. It will not soil as quickly as do cotton and linen goods—indeed, one can wear a dress of silk all season, having it renovated at the cleanser's for the following summer. Then they are cool, pretty and do not "muss" and wrinkle as cottons do.

Grass linen in all weights is as popular as it was the first season it appeared. It now comes figured, corded and striped with lace, so is quite up to date. No material is prettier or more becoming to a ruddy brown summer skin. In the next illustration is put a charming dress made in tailor-like severity of corded and plain grass linen in natural color. The edges of the plain linen were scalloped and finished with dark blue silk buttonhole stitch and embroidery. The cording showed only in a narrow belt at the back. This was a pretty example of the gown fastening at the back. A youthful figure is well suited to such a plan, but large women should beware.

It is noticeable that all wash gowns are made with long skirts. Alas for our comfort and freedom in the country if we insist on dressing up much of the time! Importers, dressmakers and pattern sellers show little sympathy. When a protesting woman says: "But such a skirt will not keep clean a minute," they merely smile and call her attention to their lovely assortment of outing costumes, and explain that many long skirt suits are so planned that the bodice and jacket will go jauntily with a short skirt. The first two pictured suits were of this sort. Many such are made with two skirts, one short and one long, the idea being that when the wearer wants freedom and desires to walk, run or go boating, she can be suitably clad in a short skirt. At other times she can be "at least decently in the fashion," as one dressmaker said when she urged a half yard train to a white lawn dress.

It is a little extravagant to include white flannel among wash goods, especially when it is made up with a long skirt, but who could resist one like this middle gown? It was self-corded for finish. The simplicity and the material constitute its charm. It is suitable for almost any occasion of the dressy early summer order. Before voting it hopelessly extravagant, remember that a cloth dipped in salt and rubbed over a spot will almost restore white flannel or cloth. Besides, a skirt really trained is easily held up safely out of the dust, while a so-called skirt that clears never really does clear the ground. Such a dress is made on white silk, but the silk petticoat is quite free from the cloth. This same design would be pretty in blue serge or in any wash material of weight.

Blue serge may not have the distinction possessed by some other newer fabrics, but its usefulness for the present and throughout the summer is unquestioned. Nowadays, too, it is easily made up to insure the look of a gown made for style and not entirely for serviceability, and that doesn't mean that it must be elaborate. The gown remaining here was sketched in blue serge, and for simple but convincing up-to-date touches it had scarlet in the waistcoat and inlaid on the skirt.

A Lucky Man.

"My husband has a great advantage over most men."

Her Surprise.

Looking Out for His Safety.

"Why have you and Miss Gadthwaite broken off your engagement?"

"Because she loves me so."

"That's a queer reason."

"Not at all. She believes in fortune-telling and when she went to have her future revealed, not long ago, she was informed that she would be married three times. That settled my case, for the time being at least. She said she was determined that I should not encounter the danger of being first on the list."

"Do you think so?"

At the Premiere.

Lady in Front Row (to her neighbor, towards the end of the second act)—Who is this man next to me, who's just come in—do you know? He doesn't seem to be paying the smallest attention to the play!

The Wings of Spring.

"Oh," sighed the poetic lady, "had I the wings of a bird!"

"Don't!" protested her husband. "Don't wish for the wings of a bird. If you had them some other woman would probably be wearing them on her hat before the season is over."

The Product Limited.

Harry—I'm not surprised at that. I suppose, in your mind's eye you could see the poor fellow shooting down through the air, even though he succeded in saving himself.

Marie—Oh, it wasn't that. In his awkward grab at something he upset his paint and a big splotch of it came right down on my new spring wrap. Did you ever hear of any one who had such luck as I have?

Patient Not Competent Judge.

A San Francisco medical journal reports a legal case that was recently tried at Tacoma, Wash., in which the question as to the liability of patients for the fees of consulting physicians. The action was to collect a consultation fee of $20 by Dr. McKone from a patient named Cole. The defense was that the plaintiff never employed Dr. McKone, but that the latter was called in without consulting him by the family physician, Dr. Stratton, who was attending him for an attack of appendicitis at the time, and for this reason the attending physician was responsible for the bill.

The court held that in serious cases the patient is not competent to judge of his own condition, and that the attending physician need not always inform the patient of his intention to call counsel, as the excitement pending such a consultation might be prejudicial to the patient's chances of recovery. A verdict was accordingly entered for plaintiff.

INDIANA GRAND ARMY

ANNUAL G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT AT TERRE HAUTE.

Battle of El Caney Reproduced—Grand Parade Witnessed by a Vast Crowd—Election of Officers—Next Encampment at Indianapolis.

The Grand Army of the Republic of Indiana held its twentieth annual encampment at Terre Haute and remained in session for three days.

The opening day, Tuesday, was marked by the arrival of the twenty thousand visitors and delegates. The famous Culver Black Horse Troop, accompanied by the Culver Military Band and three companies of Culver Cadets, arrived at noon in charge of Maj. Gignilliat and Lieut. Floyd. The Black Horse Cavalry gave an exhibition drill at the fair grounds in the afternoon.

The sham battle at the fair grounds was witnessed by a crowd of nearly 20,000. It was a representation of the American attack at El Caney, the battlefield being laid out inside the famous race track under the direction of Capt. George W. Bigler, late of Company B, 159th Indiana. Capt. D. F. Allen commanded two companies of infantry and one of artillery representing the Spanish forces, while Capt. Rich, with four companies of infantry and one of artillery, represented the commander of the United States forces. The battle was carried out with all the advances and retreats of the original and terminated with the final capture of the blockhouse on the hill by the Americans.

After supper the visitors were given receptions at the various brigade headquarters and at the State Normal School hall. At the latter place the big reception was held, and from there the guests adjourned to the armory of Company B, where a second reception was given. At both places speechmaking and musical programs were carried out.

Wednesday was the big day of the encampment, fully 30,000 people being in the city. The parade was a great success. The Grand Army turned out in large numbers. The National Guard showed the discipline of the past year in its splendid marching. The Culver Black Horse Cavalry and the infantry attracted much attention, as well as the civic and local military organizations. An immense crowd filled sidewalks and streets through which the procession passed. A notable feature was the marching of the Terre Haute school boys. The Governor and his staff in full uniforms added brilliancy to the occasion.

The welcome of the city was officially extended by the Mayor. Following his brief remarks came a most happy speech by Col. McLean. Commander Ryan responded and Commander-in-Chief Johnson spoke at length on all topics affecting the Grand Army. Gen. John C. Black made a gem of a speech, setting forth that the great nation of to-day, with its wonderful development and with its greater promise was born of the sentiment which inspired the Union soldier. Gov. Mount received a hearty welcome and spoke feelingly to the old comrades, but made his address brief.

The annual address of Commander Ryan was listened to with interest. He and the other officers, in their official reports, showed the great order to be in a prosperous condition.

The election of representatives and alternates to the national encampment was the first business of Thursday's session. Comrade Irvin Robbins put Admiral Brown in nomination for representative at large. The announcement was received with applause and he was unanimously elected. Col. W. E. McLean of Terre Haute was unanimously elected alternate.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

William L. Dunlap, Franklin, commander.

Morton C. Rankin, Terre Haute, senior vice-commander.

Solomon A. Pennington of Kokomo, junior vice-commander.

Dr. Charles M. Gravis, Martinsville, medical director.

Rev. Charles W. Stewart, Danville, chaplain.

Council of Administration—Ben Starr, Richmond; J. S. Conlogue, Kendallville; W. E. Shilling, Indianapolis; Henry P. Rost, Michigan City; James D. Carmody, Evansville.

The proposition to permit those who served in the Spanish war to join the Grand Army received no favor. The resolutions passed indorse President McKinley's administration and laud the achievements of Admiral Dewey.

The encampment of 1900 goes to Indianapolis by unanimous vote.

The convention of the Woman's Relief Corps was attended by 384 delegates and officers. Upon election of officers the following were chosen: Mrs. Maria Slater of Logansport, president; Mrs. Mary A. McElvain of Terre Haute, senior vice-president, and Mrs. Mary Wilson, junior vice-president.

The convention of the Ladies of the Grand Army was attended by about sixty delegates. During the year three circles have been organized, making the number sixteen, with a total membership of 875.

HENRY CLAY FRICK.

NEW HEAD OF THE CARNEGIE STEEL COMPANY.

A Poor Bookkeeper in 1870, He Is Now a Multimillionaire and Controls Enterprises Involving Hundreds of Millions of Dollars.

As the head of the new Carnegie Steel Company, the greatest of all the recently consolidated industrial concerns, Henry Clay Frick has become a man of world-wide interest. He is a man of uncommon mould. At 21 he was a poorly paid bookkeeper in a distillery, To-day, at 50, he is the owner of the greatest coke-making plants in the world, has a private fortune amouting to $15,000,000 or more, and is the active head of enterprises involving the use of hundreds of millions of dollars in capital. A man who can make this kind of a record for himself can be truthfully described as "uncommon." Mr. Frick is the builder of his own fortune. He secured what he has without the aid of family influence or wealth—and it is the creation of his own brain and industry.

Henry Clay Frick was born in Fayette County, Ohio, in 1849. His father was a farmer in moderate circumstances, who had lived in West Overton, Pa. With nothing but a common school education young Frick went to work as a dry goods clerk, but soon gave up that to become a bookkeeper in the distillery owned by his grandfather at Bradford, Pa.

This took young Frick into the very heart of the coke region. Although he was only 21 years of age then, he had developed the habit of accumulating money, and saved most of his earnings. He took a great interest in the manufacture of coke, studied the process, and made up his mind that he would some day go into the business. At this time, too, he was a close student of the labor situation in the coal and coke regions.

A short time after passing his majority Frick and two other young men scraped up enough money between them to buy 300 acres of land and 50 coke ovens. They began to manufacture coke under the firm name of Frick & Co. Frick succeeded so well in the coke business that within four years he increased his ovens from fifty to one hundred. The coke business kept on booming at a great rate until 3,673 ovens had been built in the region.

Then came the panic of 1873. The price of pig iron declined enormously, the price of coke fell in sympathy, and everybody wanted to get out of the coke business. Not so with Mr. Frick. He invested every dollar that he had or could raise in purchasing the coke properties and ovens which others were so ready to sell at low prices. All through the panic he kept his ovens going. In 1876 he separated from his old partners and took E. M. Ferguson as a new partner. Real success came to this new firm in 1879, when there came an unprecedented demand for coke, and prices went up from $1 to $5 a ton.

Under the impetus of this boom Mr. Frick continued to buy coke ovens and coke lands until in 1882 his firm had 3,000 acres of coal land and 1,026 coke ovens. It was that year that Carnegie Bros. & Co. (limited) became partners in the firm of H. C. Frick & Co.

The success of the firm from 1882 to 1890 was phenomenal, and it is generally acknowledged that it was in the greatest degree due to the energy and push of Mr. Frick himself. In 1890 the corporation owned and controlled 25,000 acres of coal lands, 42 of the 80 coke plants in the region, with an aggregate of 10,046 ovens, three water plants and a pumping capacity of 5,000,000 gallons daily, 35 miles of railroad and 1,200 cars. Eleven thousand men were on the pay rolls of the company then. On the death of David A. Stewart, in December, 1888, Andrew Carnegie offered Mr. Frick an interest in the firm of Carnegie Bros. & Co., which Mr. Frick accepted and paid for. He was at once made chairman of the directors of Carnegie Bros. & Co.

As an employer of labor Mr. Frick earned the everlasting hatred of the Amalgamated Association. When he was put at the head of all of the Carnegie steel interests, the Amalgamated Association felt that the fight for its life had come, and in June, 1892, came the bloody Homestead riots.

It was a time of great political excitement and party managers brought the greatest influence to bear on Mr. Frick to get him to agree to the terms demanded by the men. But he was deaf to all entreaty. The only question he would consider was how to defeat the strikers. He thought of nothing else, even after the Anarchist Berkman had shot him and he was upon a bed from which it was feared he would never rise. The bloody battle of Homestead, when the Pennsylvania State troops were called out to protect the Carnegie Works, and in which so many lives were lost, did not swerve Mr. Frick in his purpose. He fought the strike out and won it.

Mr. Frick and others were indicted for manslaughter as a result of the Homestead riots, but the indictments were afterward dismissed on the motion of the prosecuting officers. Since that time other anarchists have threatened to kill Mr. Frick. It is a fact that he has been nervous on that score. He is always very careful whom he receives, either at his home, his office, or his hotel. Up to the time the Anarchist Berkman made an attempt to kill him, and succeeded in wounding him seriously, Mr. Frick gave little heed to the threats made against him, but since then he has shown more concern for his personal safety. Personally Mr. Frick is a very pleasant man. He spends very little time in social pleasures and is wrapped up completely in his business.

HOW TO KEEP COOL

FROM a hygienic standpoint, to become overheated is as great an error as for an infielder to mess a ground hit. Equatorial climes with their dazzling heat do not destroy their peoples. Down close to the equator, where the sun gets a full tilt at the earth, sunstrokes are comparatively rare. Up here, where a temperature of 100 degrees Fahrenheit is rare, sunstrokes or their twin afflictions, heat prostrations, are very common. Why it should be so is a topic of interest. When it is known that in neither case, the health being good, should a person be in any grave danger, the frequency of death in summer from such causes is a marvel. It all depends on the man. Some persons will walk smoothly and placidly along the street without an umbrella, with the sun making ridges of heat across the avenue. Collar and cuffs will not wilt and the man seems unconscious that the weather is playing any unusual pranks. He may carry pounds too much weight, yet suffer but little, if at all. Another man of thin figure will pant and moan and mop his fevered brow in an agony of heat. Why this is thus is what a correspondent would term a mystery. But there is no mystery about it. One knows he is not hot, the other thinks he is. Keeping cool is not a matter of clothes or their lack. There are men on earth who wear nothing but a brow clothed in thought, whose sunburned pelts indicate the advantage of garments, even if the garden of Eden had not prematurely discovered the same thing.

Some positive directions apply to the art of keeping cool. The first is the most important and if well observed robs the weather of nine-tenths of its terrors. That rule is a simple one and is merely to give the sun a chance. Let him get a good, square whack at you early in the season. To avoid the sun with an umbrella when he first burns savagely is to invite the heat prostration habit. Therefore get out and mingle with the rays as soon as the season opens. This will do three things—give you a beautiful tinting, fill your lungs with fresh air and adjust your hide to the incoming heat. Custom rules in this as in other things. If you accustom yourself to the sun he will be your friend. The baseball man plays when the thermometer speaks of 104 and does not abate his exertions a trifle. Any man or woman who so wishes may do the same thing in a smaller degree without the hard training of athletes. Having thus prepared your system for sunlight and lots of it see that your health is kept up properly. Let the vascular system—the circulation, arterial, venous and capillary—and the alimentary system be in proper running order and you will suffer little from heat.

Having thus laid the foundation for a successful season do not spoil it all by insanely rushing about your undertakings under the apparent belief that to-day is the last on earth. If you do it may be the last. Hurry never accomplishes anything but the discomfiture of him who rushes unduly. A sunstroke usually comes from exposure directly due to the rays of the sun. Heat prostration may overtake a man who has been in the shade all day. Do not overeat, do not overdrink, do not overdress. Take exercise in moderation. Do not fear the sun, for unless sick or reduced in vitality by overindulgence it is your friend rather than your enemy. Carry out the foregoing indefinite rules and you will finish winner in a summer of scorching heat.

OLD NEWGATE PRISON.

This Thousand-Year-Old Building to Give Way to a New Structure.

Newgate prison, the cable dispatches say, is to be torn down. On its site a new court building is to be erected. Newgate is a place of bloody memories. Standing in the heart of London, it has been for a thousand years the scene of tortures and executions. Englishmen will probably be glad to see its ancient walls give way to a new structure which will stand for more civilized and merciful methods of punishment.

Newgate has not been used since 1881, except for the detention of prisoners awaiting trial or execution. It is one of the oldest buildings in London—how old no one knows. It was used as a prison as far back as 1188, as the records of those times show. It was probably built several hundred years before. Hundreds of thousands of prisoners have been executed within its walls. In 1556 it was almost altogether destroyed by fire and again in 1630, but was rebuilt, and has always served the same grim purpose. The names of the distinguished men who have been imprisoned in Newgate would fill a volume. Among them are William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania; Defoe, author of "Robinson Crusoe;" and Sir Robert Wright, Lord Chief Justice of England.

Inside Newgate Prison many prisoners have been tortured. In fact, as late as 1723 torture was used, and until 1868 the executions were public and were made the occasion of a holiday. In 1807, when 40,000 people had gathered to see one Hollway, a murderer, executed, a panic ensued, and 100 men, women, and children were trampled to death. As late as 1788 women were burned to death in front of Newgate prison for counterfeiting, and the stocks and pillories were always full of unfortunates. Dickens thundered against the abomination of the public executions at Newgate, and it is largely due to his great influence that the reform was accomplished in 1868.

is hardly to be wondered at that the villagers regard it as supernatural and having some miraculous powers, especially in cases of courtship. The water was found so pure that a pipe was introduced to assist its flow, and a tank made to receive the sparkling liquid. The spring is the trysting spot of the adjacent villages.

TWO STRIKING COSTUMES.

END OF WAR ROMANCE.

A Wife Who Followed Her Soldier Husband to the Philippines.

Capt. F. E. Buchan's return home from the Philippines on the United States transport Valencia was a sad one. He brought with him the body of his wife, who succumbed to the climate in the Philippines. Mrs. Buchan had been a bride but a few months. When the Kansas regiment left home to fight its country's battles in the Philippines there was an understanding between Capt. Buchan and his sweetheart, Miss Lucinda M. Smith, of Lawrence, Kan. Separation was more than the two could stand, so with the exchange of letters came a determination to join their lot in the fortunes of war.

MRS. BUCHAN.

They were married and the young bride followed her soldier husband to San Francisco. Here the first cloud fell across their honeymoon. The officers were not permitted to have the company of their wives on the transports and separation seemed inevitable. But the Kansas girl had pluck. With the wife of another officer, Col. Fred Funston, she became a stowaway on the Indiana, and although the Government tried to prevent it she journeyed as far as Honolulu on the way to Manila before she was parted from her husband. Though compelled to leave the transport, she followed Capt. Buchan within a few days on the regular steamer and shared his lot up to the time of her death.

Unequaled for Its Purpose.

As a covering for walls and ceilings, there is nothing equal to Alabastine, the celebrated product of the Alabastine Company of Grand Rapids, Mich. It is eminently healthful and economical. Being porous, it permits ventilation, in which it is superior to wall papers, which, besides, are often tainted with poison. This makes Alabastine unequal for use in sleeping rooms. Too much thought cannot be given to the condition of the apartments in which we sleep, and they should be freed as much as possible from the germs of disease and death. By coating the walls and ceilings of these rooms with the pure Alabastine, this danger is obviated. There is nothing more pure and cleanly than this wall coating, the base of which is a natural rock product that sets on the wall and hardens with age. Alabastine does not rub or scale off and requires no scraping before retinting. There is absolutely no comparison between the beautiful and durable Alabastine and the dirty kalsomines and other disease-engendering appliances of which the world is now weary. It is the only preparation which can be properly applied by the householder himself. It is only necessary to mix it with cold water. It is then ready for use, and a child can brush it on.

Alabastine is for sale by paint dealers, who, when requested, will give inquirers a card of tints, running from white to twelve other beautiful colors. Or this may be had, with a free copy of their paper, "The Alabastine Era," by writing to the company. Purchasers should refuse any offers of "something just as good" as Alabastine. By insisting on having Alabastine in packages and properly labeled, they will get satisfactory results and beautiful walls.

Supreme Court Sustains the Foot-Ease Trade Mark.

Justice Laughlin, in Supreme Court, Buffalo, has ordered a permanent injunction, with costs, and a full accounting of sales, to issue against Paul R. Hudson, the manufacturer of the foot powder called "Dr. Clark's Foot Powder," and also against a retail dealer of Brooklyn, restraining them from making or selling Dr. Clark's Foot Powder, which is declared, in the decision of the Court, an imitation and infringement of "Foot-Ease," the powder to shake into your shoes for tired, aching feet, now so largely advertised and sold all over the country. Allen S. Olmsted, of LeRoy, N. Y., is the owner of the trade-mark "Foot-Ease," and he is the first individual who ever advertised a foot powder extensively over the country. He will send a sample Free to any one who writes him for it. The decision in this case upholds his trade-mark and renders all parties liable who fraudulently attempt to profit by the extensive "Foot-Ease" advertising, in placing upon the market a spurious and similar appearing preparation, labeled and put up in envelopes and boxes like Foot-Ease. Similar suits will be brought against others who are now infringing on the Foot-Ease trade-mark and common law rights.

If it wasn't for enthusiasm but little would ever be accomplished.

A Study in Mechanics.

The Deering Ideal Mower, made in Chicago, affords an interesting study in advanced machines, and is as prefect a machine as brain, brawn and money can build. It is furnished throughout with Deering Roller and Ball Bearings. The "Ideal" has a very wide truck and high wheels, insuring great stability and ample traction. Its gears are light, strong and reliable. In this machine the amount of lost motion is so slight that the instant one of the mower wheels starts it communicates power to the crank shaft and knife, thus making it possible to start in heavy grass without backing. The knife may be removed in fifteen seconds, simply by raising a latch. It is the only mower on the market equipped with Ball Bearings of the bicycle pattern.

Ask Your Friends About It.

Your distressing cough can be cured. We know it because Kemp's Balsam within the past few years has cured so many coughs and colds in this community. Its remarkable sale has been won entirely by its genuine merit. Ask some friend who has used it what he thinks of Kemp's Balsam. There is no medicine so pure, none so effective. MANY young women are completely prostrated for a week out of every month by menstrual sufferings. The terrors of menstruation overshadow their whole lives. How needless this is in most cases is shown by the thousands of grateful letters constantly coming to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., from women she has helped.

HAGGARD FACES IN WOMEN

MISS JOIE SAUL, Dover, Mich., writes as follows to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I suffered untold agony every month and could get no relief until I tried your medicine; your letter of advice and a few bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have made me the happiest woman alive. I shall bless you as long as I live."

MISS ROSA HELDEN, 126 W. Cleveland Ave., Canton, O., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Four years ago I had almost given up hope of ever being well again. I was afflicted with those dreadful headache spells which would sometimes last three or four days. Also had backache, bearing-down pains, leucorrhœa, dizziness, and terrible pains at monthly periods confining me to my bed. After reading so many testimonials for your medicine, I concluded to try it. I began to pick up after taking the first bottle, and have continued to gain rapidly, and now feel like a different woman. I can recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in highest terms to all sick women."

Pain leaves its mark. Faces become pale and thin. Features grow sharp and haggard. The stamp of suffering is unmistakable. Write to Mrs. Pinkham for aid. Her experience is the widest in the world and her advice is free.

Why Is a Deering Binder Always Worth What You Pay for It?—
BECAUSE THE DEERING HARVESTER CO. IS BEHIND IT.

The man who owns a Deering machine knows that he has full value for his money—knows it because the Deering guaranty goes with every machine sold by them.

Deering Machines are as strong as the Deering claim, and that claim, in substance, is that Deering Grain and Grass Harvesting Machines will outclass all others in practical field performance at harvest time—that they will "clean up the crop" better than any other—that they are by all odds of lighter draft than any other—and that either in the field or on the road they are more conveniently handled than any other.

These are strong claims, but remember the Deering Harvester Company is behind them.

Eighth Grade Notes

The colors of the Eighth Grade are orange and black.

Johnny Hoff made a gentlemanly assistant usher for the eighth grade exercises.

Moletus High and wife came up from Jackson, to attend the graduation exercises. Their daughter Cora was one of the class.

The room is decorated with a motto on three artistically drawn shields. It reads "Labor Conquers Everything" and appeals more strongly to our English eyes, that did the one time ever present "Labor Omnia Vincit."

The S. S. at St. Joe

It was the 34th Annual Sunday School Convention of DeKalb county, and all agree it was one of the very best. The attendance was good in spite of a bad weather at the beginning. The program was interesting, the subjects being well treated. DeKalb county is way up among the first in the state in this work, not only for the number of conventions, but the average attendance and the full payment of its contributions.

Dr. W. H. Madden of Butler was absent for the first and only time since the organization 34 years ago. He is dangerously ill at his home. Messages of sympathy were sent him from the convention.

A nice little diversion in the work was by Miss Addie Widney, who brought a class of over 30 little boys and girls. They were sweet and bright, and the work was instructive.

Wednesday evening two churches were used and each was crowded full.

Over 40 delegates were present. And the visitors all say they were royally entertained.

A Thousand Tongues

Could not express the rapture of Annie E. Springer, of 1125 Howard-st., Philadelphia. Pa., when she found that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption had completely cured her of a hacking cough that for many years had made life a burden. All other remedies and doctors could give her no help, but she says of this Royal Cure—"it soon removed the pain in my chest and I can sleep soundly, something I can scarcely remember doing before. I feel like sounding its praises throughout the Universe." So will every one who tries Dr. King's New Discovery for any trouble of the Throat, Chest or Lungs. Price 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's drugstore, every bottle guaranteed.

Fined Him

Mrs. Brewer's Humane Work.

A well-to-do Rhode Island lady, who looks after the sick of her city, writes to Dr. Hartman of her practical experience with Pe-ru-na.

HUMANITY is blessed with some good samaritans. Mrs. Lizzie M. Brewer, of 196 High St., Westerly, R. I., is a noble woman who devotes a great deal of time and money to caring for the sick of Westerly. She has been for several years one of Pe-ru-na's strongest friends, and under date of March 17, 1898, she writes the following letter to Dr. Hartman, Columbus, O., the originator of Pe-ru-na:

MRS. LIZZIE M. BREWER.

"Your welcome advice is at hand, and my gratitude is unbounded for the privilege I enjoy of consulting so renowned a physician as yourself, always receiving such prompt and satisfactory replies to my questions. And what amazes me most is that this can be done year after year, with unfailing certainty, free of charge. I have learned that you have become to thousands and thousands of households the same beneficent guide and adviser that you are to my household.

"As for your free books, I read them everyone, and treasure their contents as the choicest wisdom. I have used Pe-ru-na in my family for over four years. I find it a sure cure for all catarrhal affections so common in this part of the country. It cures a cold at once; there is no cough medicine that can at all equal Pe-ru-na; as for la grippe there is no other remedy that can at all compare with Pe-ru-na. I notice in medical journals and from the testimony of my neighbors that the doctors seem quite unsuccessful in treating la grippe, especially in removing the after effects of la grippe. From personal observation in many cases I know that Pe-ru-na is a sure specific for these cases. I am among the sick a great deal in our city, and have supplied many invalids with Pe-ru-na, simply because I am enthusiastic in my faith as to its results. I have never known it to fail to quickly and permanently remove that demoralized state of the human system which follows la grippe.

"In cases of weaknesses peculiar to my sex I am sure that no other remedy can approach in good results the action of Pe-ru-na. It meets all the bad symptoms to which females are subject. The irregularities and nervousness, the debility and misery, which afflict more or less the women from girlhood to change of life, are one and all met and overcome by your excellent Pe-ru-na. I wish every young lady in our city could read your book 'Health and Beauty.' Any one wishing to inquire of me further can do so by enlcosing a stamp for reply."

THE KNIGHT DRAIN

A Ditch Case with a History and Far-reaching Effect

Henry Hood of Waterloo and Gust Helmuth of Keyser, were here today making their report a second time on this big ditch. Though the ditch is not more than three or four miles long it is a very important one, as quite a number of other public drains will empty into it. It is important for another reason, that the decision of the supreme court, in passing on this case is one that affects the state at large and a number of counties have cases that were kept waiting to hear how the Knight ditch was settled in the supreme court The first viewers on this ditch reported in the March term 1894, but owing to some defect, a remonstrance filed against it was successful. A new set of viewers was chosen, who reported in June of the same year. These re-viewers were A. W. Bair, Gust Helmuth and Henry Hood. They brought in a report similar to that of the first viewers, as they found their own report was only about $40 different. But another remonstrance came up, and the case went into court, The decision of the court was favorable to the ditch and the remonstrators appealed to the supreme court of the state After taking several years to reach the case, it was last winter decided again in favor of building the ditch. The court said that it is good law to compel all who are directly or indirectly benefited, to help pay the cost, even if they lived at some distance. So, the ditch is to be made, and today, Mr. Hood and Mr. Helmuth met in the office of Surveyor Krontz to complete the work they began five years ago. Mr. Bair did not meet with them, as he has recently removed to Fostoria, Ohio. And in about a year from now, these men will be paid for services rendered six years before. But the "Knight Drain Case" will be quoted in court all over the state, and probably for many years to come.

His Lead Mine.

Getttng on the Wabash train Saturday we found W. P. Carpenter, an old resident of Butler, but now of Roann, to which place he was returning after a trip into Eastern Ohio. He had been back to Wellsville near the Pennsylvania line, that town being his early home. He had not been back for 34 years, and the cause of this trip was a peculiar one. He had often heard his father speak of a probable deposit of lead in one of the big hillsides of that mountainous region. His father had described it to him so well, that he felt sure he could locate it, which this trip proved correct. An examination of the ore shows the presence of silver and of zinc in the lead, though perhaps not in quantities enough to affect the value of the ore to any great extent. They expect to mine for lead alone, and for that purpose a company has been formed at Newcastle, Pa., who will open the property and develop it. If it proves valuable, they will pay Dr. Carpenter a bonus. or rather a share of the proceeds, he not being required to put in any capital. Of course the matter is partly in the nature of an experiment but we hope the Doctor has struck a bonanza.

DeKalb Out of Debt.

By the notice of Treasurer Hines in another column it will be seen that "all orders" are called in. This means that the treasury has money to pay all outstanding orders. In other words, the county debt is to be paid off This is as published last year, exclusively in the COURIER. There will be no debt the minute all the orders are brought in. And even the bills allowed by the commissioners at this term may be paid in cash. Treasurer Hines makes a good showing, and all the other officers should have a share of the credit for good management.

After the Bugs.

We had a call this morning from Mr. Emerick Wells a practical horticulturist, a man who has for nearly fifty years, worked among fruit trees, rearing, planting, trimming and caring for them. He has made the fruit pests of all sorts, a study from a scientific point, and has originated several remedies. He has been in the county only a short time, but has trimmed at least a dozen orchards and treated some of them. At present he is on his return to his home in Mansfield, Ohio, but in a short time will be here again. He believes we can have plenty of good fruit, but in order to get it and to save our trees, we must fight the insects.

Good Corn Medicine.

(Goshen Democrat.)

A Goshen lady was suffering from a troublesome corn on one of her toes. She procured some salve, applied it and went to bed. It was several hours before she could rest on acconnt of the pain caused by the salve, but she finally fell asleep. The next morning the pain had entirely disappeared and she arose congratulating herself on the success of the treatment. Then came a startling discovery. She had treated the wrong toe.

Gents;—I have used many medicines, but think I got the best results from your Pepsin Syrup. One other member of my family also used it with the same happy effect. COURT NOTES.

Wednesday's Daily.

There were two struck juries prepared today for service in two cases coming up from Fort Wayne. One was the case of Reithorff vs the Fort Wayne City Railway Co., and the other, the case of Clemm, against the same company. The latter had a struck jury once before, but it was not tried on account of some hitch in the matter. Rose & Rose are atttorneys for the Company, and Judge Roby for the plaintiffs in both cases. The case from Garrett is still going on.

Thursday's Daily.

Yesterday the court ran double. Judge Woodhull was still working at the Garrett Gas Engine case in the main room, while Judge Hartman was holding court in the rear room taking the occasion to settle the Foltz partition case.

This morning Judge Watkins of Huntington came here and began hearing the case of the the Fort Wayne Electric Company vs The City of Garrett. Parts of the cases had been settled and the work of settling some side issues growing out of it is now going on. C. E. Emanuel represents one of these parties; Judge Roby, another, and Mountz of Garrett represents that city. Other attorneys and interested parties are present.

Friday's Daily.

This morning, Judge Watkins was still helping the boys to grind out the cases in which the city of Garrett is interested, It was decided against Garrett. Judge Watkins has gone home.

Saturday's Daily.

The sheriff is hunting up the men for the struck juries. Both cases are set for next Tuesday.

There was another reef taken in the Ashley Furniture Co. case yesterday, a judgment of $100 being rendered against Theo. Gary.

In the cases against the city of Garrett, Clough & Sons, have a claim of $1300 for pipe furnished, which the city claims was not good, This will be tried later.

The Arbuckle—Ryan Co., got a judgment of $1010, and the Knight & Jellison Co., $279 in the same contest against Garrett

Family Reunion

A reunion of all the surviving members of the family of Amariah Johnson, one of the pioneers of DeKalb Co., (except the youngest son Amariah, of New Paris, Ind.,) was held at the pleasant home of Henry Beams at Spencerville yesterday. The members of the family and friends present were: R. H. Johnson and wife of Wichita, Kan., I. M. Johnson, Nathan Johnson and wife, Uriah Hettinger and daughter Jennie, Mrs. Elizabeth Shilling, Mrs. Simp Johnson and children Faust and Aileen of Auburn, Wm. Johnson and wife and Uriah Johnson of Jackson township, Henry Beams, wife, son George and daughter Almeda, of Spencerville, and Miss Warcup of Huntertown.

After enjoying a bountiful repast at which all played a full hand, the remainder of the stay in the pleasant villiage on the banks of the famous and ever to be remembered "Old St. Joe," was spent in rehearsals of the past and the hopes of the future. Some time was spent in viewing the old landmarks and the new modern improvements. All join in pronouncing it a very pleasant and long to be remembered reunion. 'God be with us till we meet again."

Out in Kansas

lives a happy wife. She writes: "I have used Mother's Friend before two confinements. The last time I had twins, and was in labor only a few minutes. Suffered very little." The reason why does expectant mothers so much good is because it is an external liniment, to be applied upon the outside, where much of the strain comes. It helps because the pores of the skin readily absorb it, and it comes into direct contact with and is absorbed by the parts involved. Morning sickness is quickly banished, and nervousness is kept completely away. The sense of dread and foreboding is not experienced, even during labor itself. Confinement is short and almost without pain. Recovery is quick and sure. Best of all, Mother's Friend benefits the unborn just as much as the expectant mother, and when the little one comes it will be strong, lusty and healthy.

Mother's Friend

Letter From Cuba

HAVANA, CUBA, June 2, 2899.

CAPT. FRANK LAHNUM.

DEAR SIR:—I will take the pleasure to write you a few lines to let you know that I am well and hope you and your folks are all the same. I have at last got in the land of Cuba, and have taken in the sights of the forts and the wrecked Maine and the Cuban army, and the graveyard of the dead heroes of the Maine. I am not sorry that I re-enlisted for I like it better here than I do at home, but I got in a good company. They are not as strict as you think they are, but we have a nice place. We are in barracks in the upper story and get a good breeze from the sea. The boys have all been in the best of health, but I must say that the Cubans give us ten days to leave the island, but we are here yet and think that we will stay here a while. After the rainy season I am going to Santiago to spend fifteen days with a friend in the 1st Inft. We have only one hour drill a day and I have not been on guard since I have been here and don't know why. But I must say for the Spanish people that they are all right, for I have a Spanish girl that is learning me to talk Spanish and I think she is the only peach on the tree and her folks use me just as good as the folks at home. But the Cubans are a black, low set of people, mixed with negro and too lazy to work, and they eat what we throw away. Well Capt. I suppose Auburn is on a boom now, I hear there there is a lot of work, but I wasn't built for work, but I was built for a soldier and will be one as long as I have good health. Well Capt, I have a picture to exchange and I want yours, You send me your picture and I will return you any picture taken in any part of the forts or the city, Morro Castle, or the wrecked Maine, or the ground of the dead heroes of the Maine. Well I will have to close as I want to write to Cap McIntosh. So write soon. From one of your privates,

ALBRT W. ANKNEY,

Dr. Madden Dead

Word came to this office last evening, and a letter from Dr. Shumaker at Butler to Dr. Swarts here, confirmed the sad news of the death of Dr. Wm. H. Madden at his home in that place. The end came at 5:45 yesterday morning. His death had been expected any time for several months, as he had been lying quite low for that time. The funeral is to be at Butler tomorrow, (Saturday,) at 10 a. m.

Dr. Madden was one of the most highly esteemed men in the county, and it is with sadness that we write of his death.

Dear Sirs:—I received a gun shot wound in '64 while in the army which caused partial paralysis of the bowels and from that time to the present I have had to use a laxative. I have tried a great many kinds of medicines in that time but have never found any as effective or that has been as near natural as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

COMMISSIONERS' COURT

The business for today, (Thursday) is on ditches, that being their regular day.

The Board is having a busy session as the work this time includes the settlement of bills with the assessors, the expense for that purpose, being unusually large as this time the land had to be appraised. The recent changes in laws will no doubt make more work for them.

LIQUOR LICENSES.

Yesterday was liquor license day, and although the number of applicants was not greater than usual, there were several unusual conditions. The licenses that came up in the usual form were easily disposed of. These were Thomas Sommers and W. P. Frederick of Auburn; C. W. Tomlinson of Butler; A. C. Widmer, Wm. Kepler and Frank Snyder of Garrett; Ira Kiems of Waterloo. C. F. Fell of Auburn was continued till Friday.

The unusual cases were those from Corunna and Newville. At Corunna Ernest Huffman had advertised in the Garrett Clipper, and Levi Hartman in the Garrett Herald. Mr. Hartman denies any connection with the affair. The saloon site named in his application is just outside the limits of Corunna on the Fairfield side of the line. Both Fairfield and Richland presented remonstrances signed by a majority of their voters, and as the applicants did not appear before the Board, judgment was entered up against them, and they will get no license.

At Newville, the case was still more unusual. It appears that three different persons had applied for a license to start a saloon in Newville, all for the same location. So if one failed, perhaps another would succeed, and so they expected it a pretty sure thing for a saloon there by some one. Then to make matters more complicated, some of them at least, advertised in the Butler Herald in a blind place in the paper among railroad time cards. But the people there while objecting to having any saloon, objected especially to the way in which these parties were stealing a march on them. So, they got up a remonstrance with over half the voters on it, against one of the men. and were prepared for him, but not for the other two. It seems, however, that all three applicants failed to appear, so that no one gets a license for Newville.

As noted exclusively in the COURIER the delayed part of the Newville liquor license case, had to be postponed till today. The people down there, had come up on Wednesday, as we noted, with a majority of the voters on a remonstrance against John King a man living near Newville, the only man they had heard about. But when they got here and found two other applicants they were not prepared for them. So they got an adjournment till today. Of these two other applicants for a license Sydney Bronson was one, but he has withdrawn. So, they had to fight only one man, Frank Fell. And here comes in another, and the queerest phase of all this trouble, Fell, though he was working to get a license for himself, had signed the remonstrance against King, which had been brought in by the temperance people on Monday. So, though all three, King, Fell and Bronson, were merely trying to get a license which would enable them to allow Dean a former saloon keeper to go on and sell, yet this one man had signed a remonstrance against one of his partners. Again, this man Brunson, is the man who put his license notice in the Butler Herald, chucked in with a railroad notice so it would not be seen. This railroad notice is for the Illinois Central's excursions to California, and after a plain head "Sunset Limited" comes the license notice close under this head and in small type, and without its own proper head of "Liquor License Notice." It was a pretty slick game, but it made all the harder sledding for the applicant.

Fireworks Let Go.

Thirty-six buildings, comprising almost the entire plant of the Nordlinger-Charlton Fireworks Company, at Graniteville, Richmondborough, New York, were blown up, and the entire fireworks plant practically wiped out of existence. No lives were lost, but three persons were injured, two of them seriously. The loss on buildings and material is over $30,000. Those severely burned are E. E. Thuyster, a machinist, and Thomas Fox, a packer. Thomas Brown, another employe, was not seriously burned.

An explosion which occurred at the manufacturing plant of the Paine's Fireworks Company, at Greenfield, L. I., resulted in the destruction of two manufacturing sheds and a small magazine. The damage is $25,000. One man was slightly injured.

Latest from Manila.

Manila special: It is reported that Aguinaldo has dissolved the Filipino Congress and declared himself dictator. The report is credited by the Filipinos.

The efficiency of the insurgent secret service has caused Gen. Lawton to adopt new tactics in the campaign north of Laguna de Bay. Instead of the prearranged expeditions, his troops, under Gen. Hall at Morong and Gen. Wholley at Pasig, are prepared to advance in any direction in a half hour's notice, thus lessening the chances of the enemy's learning their plans.

A son of Buencamino, one of the Filipino peace commissioners, captured by Gen. Luna, has challenged Luna to a duel on account of an alleged insult to his father.

Nineteen Passengers Hurt.

A mixed train on the central branch of the Missouri Pacific was derailed near Goffs, Kan. Nineteen passengers were severely injured.

The mail car, smoker and chair cars became derailed while the train was going at full speed, and the three cars, well loaded with passengers, toppled over a slight embankment. A number of passengers were lying asleep on the cushions. They were hurled in every direction by the sudden overturning of the coaches. Fortunately the cars did not telescope and the passengers escaped with severe cuts and bruises.

His Speech Cut Short.

Jonas Preston, Jr., was hanged in the jail at West Chester, Pa., for the murder of his wife in February, 1898. The condemned man confessed his crime on the gallows, but said that he was not to blame. While he was making a rambling statement, Sheriff Hayes pulled the rope. The fall broke Preston's neck and death came quickly. His body was taken down in twenty-one minutes. Just before the trap was sprung, Preston said he had been shamming insanity.

Advance in Steel and Iron.

Pittsburgh special: Steel billets and pig iron have again advanced. The price of steel billets is now placed at $31 a ton. Pig iron is selling at $17.50 in the valley, while the price in Pittsburgh is $18.15. One lot of 600 tons and several small lots of billets were sold at $31 a ton. It is said by prominent steel brokers that it is very hard to fill large orders on account of the heavy demand. Less than six months ago steel billets sold at $15 a ton.

A Conclusion Not Reached.

It is learned at the State Department that while sensible advance is making towards the arrangements of a modus vivendi for regulation of the Canadian boundary question, a conclusion has not yet been reached. Expert geographers are being consulted on the exact location of some of the boundary points, though as far as Dalton trail is concerned the definitive point has not been located.

Murderer Killed by Mob.

Gov. Sayers of Texas has sent a telegram to all the Governors and Attorney Generals of the Southern States, announcing that he has called an anti-trust convention to meet in St. Louis Sept. 20 for the purpose of securing concerted action against trusts.

ALTERNATIVE CANAL ROUTES.

Nicaraguan Commission Submits Several From Which to Choose.

Additional details have been obtained in regard to the route recommended by the Nicaraguan canal commission for the proposed isthmian waterway. The commission is agreed that the route from Brito to the San Juanillo river should be as set forth, but says there are two ways of connecting the canal at this point with the Caribbean sea, the first across the low country to Greytown and connecting by a straight line with the canal at San Juanillo to the Caribbean sea, where a new harbor will have to be built. The commission finds there will be little difference in the cost of the several variants, so that it will be a matter of choice with the construction engineers as to which route shall be adopted.

THREE GIRLS ARE DROWNED.

Young Women of McKendree College Meet Death While Bathing.

Three young women, students of McKendree College, were drowned in Silver creek, two miles north of Lebanon, Ill. Their names are: Miss Ruth Jepson of Lebanon, Miss Florence Spies of St. Jacob and Miss Hellene Jack of Beaucoup, Ill. The girls decided to go in bathing. There were five in the party. While in the water one of the girls dropped a parasol. Miss Jepson volunteered to recover it. In stepping out from the bank she encountered a sinkhole and went beyond her depth. Miss Spies and Miss Jack promptly went to her rescue, but they, too, slid down the slippery bank and were drawn out by an undertow into water twelve feet deep.

ESTERHAZY ADMITS IT.

Confesses to Writing the Dreyfus Bordereau on Orders.

Maj. Esternazy, who has been accused repeatedly of writing the Dreyfus bordereau, has admitted his guilt. He has confessed the authorship, but declares it was written under instructions and that the chief of the army, who, he said, had abandoned him, knew of the entire affair and shared the responsibility. This fact, Esterhazy declared, he could prove positively. Efforts, he said, had been made to secure his silence, but now neither threats nor emoluments would deter him.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS MEET.

Four Services Necessary to Accommodate the Crowd.

Sunday's four services at the First Church of Christ, Boston, marked the beginning of the annual meeting of Christian Scientists in this country and Europe. Twenty-five hundred and fifty new members were added to the roll and received into the church at the communion services. This included several from England and Scotland, and three from Australia, who made the pilgrimage to Boston to unite with the mother church.

MANY INDIANS ARE DROWNED.

Accident in the Lake of Clouds Brings Death to a Large Number.

Between twenty-five and thirty Indians, including men, women and children, were drowned in the Lake of Clouds, near the Canadian Pacific Railway, while crossing to the reservation to attend a potlatch. They were traveling in boats rudely manufactured of cariboo skins, when the long boats collided. Both vessels were overturned and the entire party was lost.

Good Showing Made.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says that the April failures were the smallest ever reported in any month. May failures are nearly $2,000,000 smaller, only 68.2 per cent of the smallest previously reported in any month, and only 34.2 per cent of those in May last year. Solvent payments were $8,328,292,052, and defaults were $3,820,686, or 45.7 cents on $1,000, against 70 cents in April, $1.19 in March and $8.02 in September, 1896. Comparison with previous years indicates that the rate of defaults to solvent business has never been as small in any other month as in May, 1899. Both in manufacturing and in trading failures were the smallest ever known in any month, and in each branch eight of the fourteen classes showed smaller failures than in May of any other year. Failures for the week have been 145 in the United States, against 222 last year, and 14 in Canada, against 16 last year. Bradstreet's says: "Cereal exports begin to show an improvement. Wheat, including flour, shipments for the week aggregate 3,596,065 bushels, against 3,193,319 bushels last week. Corn exports for the week aggregate 3,922,497 bushels, against 3,845,818 bushels last week."

Had a Tooth in His Lung.

Joseph Hatfield of Marion, Ind., for nearly twenty years has been a constant sufferer from an agonizing pain in the right lung, and physicians had given him up as a hopeless consumptive. Recently he has had a number of hemorrhages. Saturday he had another attack, and he felt something dislodge from the spot in his lung that had given him so much pain. The foreign substance was torn loose and coughed out. On examination it was found to be a tooth that had been lodged in the lung for nearly twenty years. Mr. Hatfield says that about twenty years ago he had a number of teeth extracted, and that gas was administered to relieve the pain, and the tooth passed down his throat while he was unconscious.

Small Ransom Expected.

It is stated that the ransom expected for the return of Marion Clark, the abducted New York child, was only $300. Of this Bella Anderson was to receive $150 and the Beauregards the rest. This price was agreed upon by the conspirators after Baby Marion had been decided upon as the victim. It was based upon the financial standing of the Clarks, as investigated by Bella Anderson in the first few days of her employment with them. The wide publicity given to the crime frightened the conspirators.

King Back from Manila.

Brig. Gen. Charles King was a passenger on the transport Puebla, which arrived at San Francisco from Manila Thursday afternoon. "The fighting is not over," said Gen. King, "nor will it be until there has been a complete defeat administered to the Tagals, who are, in fact, the only ones of the island tribes that are in active rebellion. Once they are beaten on the plains they will retire to the fastnesses of the mountains, and there they will go into the unbroken forests, where the jungle is so dense that the paths are of sufficient size only for the passage of men in single file. In such surroundings ten men can stand off a regiment. That is what the people must look forward to, and it will be a long time before there is anything like peace in the Island of Luzon." Gen. King said that Gen. Otis' estimate that 30,000 men would be needed to defeat the natives was very moderate.

GOVERNORS GET SPANISH GUNS.

War Department Solves Question of Disposing of the Trophies.

The War Department has solved the question as to the disposition of the artillery captured from Spain in Cuba and Porto Rico, turning the whole matter over to the Governors of the States. Very many applications have been received at the department for the gift or loan of these guns and the pressure has been renewed since the Navy Department made known the fact that all of its guns had been disposed of. The law under which these guns can be distributed provides that they may go only to the soldiers' monument associations, Grand Army posts and municipal corporations. One gun will be allotted to each State and the Governor is asked to decide what disposition shall be made of the gun for his State.

TWO BABIES CUT TO PIECES.

Wind Blows Their Little Cab in Front of a Fast Train.

Two babies were cut to pieces by a freight train at Poplar Grove, north of Rockford, Ill., as the result of a peculiar accident. Mrs. Carl Detloff, wife of a farmer, wheeled the baby carriage containing her two children, aged 1 and 3 years, to the station, where she was to secure a parcel. She left the carriage on the platform while she went inside. Just as she was coming out a gust of wind rolled the little cab from the platform to the rails in front of a passing train. The baby carriage was demolished and the little ones instantly killed, their bodies being horribly mangled. The mother made a vain attempt to save her babies and narrowly escaped the same fate.

RICH GOLD DEPOSITS.

Ledge Nearly 80 Per Cent. Metal Reported from Oregon.

Joseph Walsh and Edward Burke, who have grown gray prospecting in Oregon, say they have at last struck a bonanza in Josephine County. They found their mine little more than a month ago, and its location is known only to themselves. They went to San Francisco to arrange for a ten-stamp mill. They have with them $30,000, which they claim to have taken from a depth of less than a foot on their location. Walsh states that in the short time since he and his partner struck their mine they have dug a shaft about twetny feet, at which depth they found a well-defined quartz ledge, or rather gold ledge, as the deposit contains 80 per cent gold.

BIG LAKE STEAMER BURNS.

Wheelsman McKenna Is Drowned in Getting Into Lifeboat.

In attempting to escape from a fire on the lake passenger steamer R. G. Stewart, sailing from Hancock to Duluth, George McKenna, the wheelman, was drowned. The remainder of the passengers and crew saved themselves by grasping life lines when the life boat capsized. The fire was first discovered in the boiler room. It had already obtained such headway that no effectual fight could be made against it. It was decided to abandon the steamer. In leaping into the life boat McKenna overturned it, and was unable to save himself.

HEMS IN THE NATIVES

LAWTON SURROUNDS FILIPINO REBELS AT MORONG.

Town Is Captured by Washington Men After Sharp Battle—Antipolo, Cainta, Mariquina and Taytay Also Taken—Several Americans Killed.

Gen. Hall's campaign against the Philippine insurgents under Gen. del Pilar at the north of Laguna de Bay continues vigorously. The American lines across the Morong peninsula, extending six miles from Morong on the east to Antipolo and Taytay on the west, began gradually closing in Monday morning, and the advance down the peninsula begun.

The operations begun by the Americans Saturday morning with a view to entrapping and crushing Del Pilar's forces about Antipolo were distinguished by heroic marches and brilliant attacks. The plan was to have Gen. Hall attack the insurgents at Antipolo and drive them down toward Laguna de Bay, while Col. Whalley, with a strong force, should advance from Pasig and attack the rebels in front, thus crushing them. The plan as originally conceived could not be carried out owing to the adverse conditions under which Gen. Hall advanced on Antipolo. What he expected to do in two hours took seven. His troops had to swim unfordable rivers and wade through swamps to their waists all under a scorching sun. It was early afternoon before Hall's troops, who had left the pumping station at 5 in the morning, reached the valley of Antipolo to the northwest and in the rear of the insurgents at Taytay and Cainta.

Seeing that Hall could not get to his position for a combined attack on the enemy on time, Gen. Lawton ordered Col. Whalley to advance on Cainta and Taytay and engage the enemy moderately until Gen. Hall, coming down the Antipolo valley in the rear, could co-operate.

Col. Whalley's advance on Cainta was brilliant. His troops swept across the four miles of open country at a rapid pace, with a swift moving skirmish line in front. The Twelfth regulars were on the left or northern flank, and the North Dakotas stretched along between Cainta and the shore of Laguna de Bay. A battery held the central position in the North Dakota line, and began shelling the town at four-mile range. Meanwhile Gen. Hall was coming down the valley toward Taytay, which is only a few miles east of Cainta, on the shore. He had had a running fight with Filipinos all day, the first encounter being at Monte in the San Mateo foothills. The insurgents were driven out of Monte and surrounded on three sides by the Oregon regiment, a sharp fight following, and before the enemy was repulsed the Oregons last three men killed and six wounded.

Gen. Hall entered Taytay meeting little resistance, the insurgents fleeing to Morong on the southeast. Shortly afterward his forces collected on the shore with the North Dakotas, composing Col. Whalley's right advance line. Gen. Hall occupied Antipolo, and Col. Whalley's forces came through Cainta and united with them, the combined force then advancing on Morong, which was captured after a sharp battle.

During the night Gen. Lawton had brought troops to Morong by water, and these advanced and connected with Hall's troops, forming a chain across the peninsula. A few Filipinos slipped through the American lines and escaped northward.

The heat is terrific, and frequent showers cause a deadly humidity. Hospital boats returning to Manila Monday morning brought 200 soldiers, who were suffering from heat prostration. The country between Manila and the field of operations offers insurmountable obstacles to the transportation of supplies, and the wagon communication from Manila through the San Mateo valley has been abandoned. Provisions and ammunition are being sent via the Pasig river.

RETRIAL FOR DREYFUS.

Court of Cassation Decides for a Revision of the Case.

A retrial by court martial was ordered in the case of Captain Dreyfus by the court of cassation at Paris. President Mazeau, in announcing that the prisoner's condemnation had been quashed, reviewed the evidence, pointing out that the captain's innocence was clearly proved. The decision of the court of cassation was greeted with cheers. It is believed to mean acquittal for the exile. The new court martial will sit at Rennis, sixty miles from Nantes. The court of cassation's review and declaration that the captain is suffering for a crime that he never committed leaves little chance for another conviction.

Previous to the announcement of the verdict crowds assembled at the palace of justice and in its neighborhood, awaiting the decision.

The audience received the decision with cries of "Vive la Justice," "Vive la Loie."

The decision says the prisoner is to be retried on the following question: "Is Dreyfus guilty of having in 1894 practiced machinations or of having had communication with a foreign power or its agents with the view of facilitating acts of hostilities in the case of a war with France?"

Col. Du Paty de Clam occupies the same cell in which Dreyfus was confined during his first trial. In this cell the present prisoner, then the commandant, tortured the captain, seeking to force a confession of guilt.

BOY MAY DIE.

Had a Dose of Pepper Administered by His Teacher.

John Tripp, the 7-year-old son of Horace Tripp of Derby, Conn., has been at the point of death from the effects of cayenne pepper given to him by his teacher, Miss Mary Comery. Miss Comery is teacher in the primary department of the Shelton public school. Young Tripp gave her more trouble than all the other pupils, and at times was utterly unmanageable. She tried in vain to break him of the habit of whispering. A friend advised her to try putting cayenne pepper in his mouth, and one day last week she took a quantity to school. Several warnings to Tripp went unheeded and Miss Comery called him to her desk. He opened his mouth wide for the pepper, and more of it went in than Miss Comery intended. The lad tried to swallow and was seized with a severe fit of coughing. He was taken to his home, and the physician who was called found him in convulsions. Acute gastritis and a high fever set in.

MISS COMERY.

Miss Comery is nearly distracted with grief over her mistake. She says she had no idea that the pepper would do any more harm than to burn the boy's tongue a little. She is young and attractive, a favorite with her pupils and was regarded as a thoroughly competent teacher.

FARM IMPLEMENTS TO GO UP.

Manufacturers Meet and Agree to a General Advance.

Farmers and retail dealers in agricultural implements will have to pay more for their plows, harrows, seeders and implements of a kindred nature in the future. At a meeting of manufacturers of these articles, held in Chicago Monday, it was decided to make a general advance in the price of all agricultural implements.

The Northwestern Plow Association extended an invitation to manufacturers of all kindred implements for the purpose of discussing and formulating plans for regulating the prices of the various implements. W. S. Thomas of the Thomas Manufacturing Company, Springfield, Ohio, presided over the meeting and J. A. Craig of the Janesville Machine Company, Janesville, Wis., acted as secretary. All the leading manufacturers were represented.

Committees will attempt to make out their price list during the summer months and will report to a meeting of the Northwestern Plow Association to be called this fall. It is thought the increase will be 15 to 25 per cent. The manufacturers said that prices for materials have advanced and that an increase in the price of the manufactured article is necessary.

COURTS BLOW AT TRUSTS.

Indiana's Supreme Bench on Rights of Combinations.

The Indiana Supreme Court struck a hard blow at trusts and combinations, reversing the case of the State on relation of the prosecuting attorney against the Portland Natural Gas and Oil Company.

The court declares that a public corporation which enters into a combination with other corporations to destroy competition and thereby raise the price at which an article is sold to an extent that is detrimental or injurious to the public becomes liable to forfeit its corporate franchise. The information set forth that the defendant company had entered into an actual combination agreement with the supposed rival company. The Circuit Court threw the case out on a demurrer and the State appealed. The Supreme Court holds that when a corporate company fails in the discharge of its duties and enters into combinations to injure the public, it offends against the law of its creation and "forfeits its right franchises." The case is remanded back to trial with instructions that the complaint be held good.

BANDITS BATTLE WITH A POSSE.

Sheriff of Douglas, Wyo., Killed in a Fight with Robbers.

The sheriff's posse which has been pursuing the men who wrecked the Union Pacific express train with dynamite at Wilcox, Wyo., fell in with the desperadoes Monday night ten miles farther north of the scene of the fight that occurred earlier the same day. The robbers made a stand in a deep ravine and opened fire on the sheriff's men at close range. At the first fire Sheriff Joe Hazen of Douglas, Wyo., was shot in the stomach. He was carried to a place of safety, and afterward removed to his home, where he died in a few hours.

After caring for the sheriff the posse agains attacked the bandits and drove them to a natural fastness in the rocks, where they intrenched themselves. The posse divided and surrounded them, dispatching messages for food and reinforcements. United States Marshal Hadzell, who had just returned to Casper from the pursuit of the other three train robbers, at once started with another posse and supplies.

CAUSE TERROR IN CUBA.

Brigands Are Committing All Sorts of Depredations.

Brigandage is causing a reign of terror throughout Cuba. At Mariel a band of negro outlaws carried a safe to the mountains. It contained $5,000. Cattle are stolen in herds. Cuban soldiers are appointed to act as police in some instances, but even where they are honest they are able to do but little. Work on the plantations is practically suspended. Those who started work have so large an amount of property stolen that they give up the business. Since the safe robbery Spaniards in Mariel have secreted their valuables and barricaded their doors. Mayor Quintana has called on Gov. Gen. Brooke for relief.

WHEAT PROSPECTS LESS BRIGHT

Lack of Vitality Shown in the Seed Planted Last Fall.

The June crop report of the Orange Judd Farmer shows a condition of winter wheat of 70.8, against 72.6 on May 1. There has been severe decline in the promise in the Ohio and Missouri valleys, and some decline in California. Insects and rust are reported over an increasing area, but the main trouble is the lack of vitality in the plant which resulted from the root damage of the severe winter. The acreage which last fall was reported at nearly 30,000,000 has been reduced by plowing up and abandonment to 24,574,000, or nearly 6,000,000 acres less than was harvested last year. The maximum possibility may now be conservatively placed at 275,000,000 bushels.

The spring wheat area is reported at 19,233,000 acres, or 100,000 acres larger than last year. In Minnesota and the Dakotas it is reported 500,000 acres smaller, but the increase in Iowa, Nebraska and the Pacific coast a little more than offsets this loss. The average condition is reported at 91.9, against 99.1 a year ago. It is lower only because the crop is started a little late. The plant is vigorous and covers the ground well. Should present condition be maintained till harvest the crop result might easily reach 275,000,000 bushels.

The corn acreage is the largest ever planted, the preliminary report reaching fully 84,000,000 acres. The crop is starting rather poorly and too much rain has interfered with planting, encouraged weed growth and caused unusual rotting of seed. The stand is rather ragged, but there is yet abundant time for recovery.

The oats area is reported at 28,931,000 acres, or less than 1 per cent increase. The condition is reported at 91.6, which, while not especially high, is not low enough to indicate any permanent impairment of the plant.

LOUBET ASSAILED BY MOB.

President of France Is Struck Over the Head with a Cane.

President Loubet of France narrowly escaped death as the result of a hostile demonstration. It is the general opinion that a carefully arranged plot for assassination was the cause of the rioting which occurred during the executive's visit to the races at Auteuil. Crowds surrounded the president's carriage and only for the heroic efforts of the police would have reached Loubet. As it was Count Christiano, a clubman and society leader, aimed a blow with his cane at the executive's head, crushing his hat. A second attack was prevented by the arrest of Christiano. One feature of the demonstration was that it seemed as if the royalists and anti-Semites were the leaders. The common people remained indifferent.

All along the route to the races denunciations and epithets were shouted at Loubet. When the carriage stopped the demonstration became serious, the crowd attempting to reach the vehicle. Many arrests were made and blows were exchanged between the police and the rioters.

Countess Boni de Castellane, formerly Miss Anna Gould, took a prominent part in the disturbance, marching at the head of a shouting throng crying, "Vive l'armee."

SUN HOLDS SWAY.

Wave of Torrid Temperature Is Felt Throughout the Country.

The hot wave has broken all June records since 1895, and its duration has been unusually long for this time of year. Chicago on Monday was the center of a heat-affected area, the official thermometer in the Auditorium tower, the coolest place in the city, registering as high as 87 degrees during the day. CITY OF PARIS ABANDONED.

American Liner Turned Over to the Marine Undertakers.

James A. Wright, second vice-president of the International Navigation Company, said in New York Monday that the company had abandoned the American liner Paris, stranded off the Cornwall coast, to the marine underwriters. The ship is insured for $1,000,000, which is divided among about forty companies, fifteen of which are in New York. The underwriters will make one more effort to drag the ship off the rocks, and, if they are unsuccessful, they will break her up.

The cargo of the Paris, which has been taken out of her, was insured for $242,000. The salvors will claim about one-third of this. Mr. Wright says that the American line has received Captain Watkins' report of the stranding, but that it will not be made public until the investigation by the Government of the cause of the accident.

VOLUNTEERS STARTING HOME.

The Second Oregon Is Coming from Manila.

The homeward movement of volunteer troops from the Philippines began last week, when the Second Oregon regiment sailed from Manila. The regiment will be landed at Portland, Ore., and go thence to Vancouver barracks for muster out. The other volunteer regiments will follow in the order of their arrival in the Philippines, unless there should be delay through the failure of organizations in other islands than Luzon to reach Manila by the time the transports are ready to depart. In that event other regiments will be sent without reference to the date of their arrival.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Thirty Thousand Hoosier Glass Workers Out of Employment—Jury Fixes Monetary Value of a Son at $140 50—First Joint Township School.

A Madison County jury returned a decidedly novel verdict, in which they established the monetary value of a boy from his fourth to twenty-first birthday. Chas. Guy's 4-year-old son was drowned in an Elwood sewer two years ago. The father brought action against the city for $10,000. The jury was instructed to find actual damages and this they did by figuring the cost and earnings of a boy each year from his fourth to his twenty-first birthday. On one side they figured his keeping, his schooling and all other expenditures and on the other side they figured his earning power. Up to his eighteenth birthday there was a deficit, but his earnings after that point made that up and on the seventeen years there was a margin of $149.50. Guy was rewarded a judgment for this amount of damages. It took the jury two days to figure out their proposition.

Indiana Glass Workers Idle.

The closing of the various glass factories as the hot weather approaches brings to light statistics concerning the glass industry. In Indiana alone there are 30,000 men employed in the glass factories. During the hot weather this number of people are out of employment, with few exceptions. Indiana is the greatest window glass producing State in the Union. There are forty-three window factories, thirty-three flint glass factories, twenty-five greenhouses and three place glass concerns. The window glass industry is controlled entirely by three labor organizations. There is not a non-union window glass factory in the United States.

Three Townships to Build a School.

The first joint township school to be erected in the State will be constructed on the line between Jackson township, Miami County, Jackson township, Howard County, and Richland township, Grant County. The trustees of the three townships met with Deputy Superintendent of Public Instruction Cotton and have approved the plan for the erection of a $10,000 school building at a point convenient for the pupils of the three townships. Should the experiment of consolidating the country schools prove satisfactory other buildings will be built.

Is Guilty of Manslaughter.

The trial of Walter Jones for the murder of Edward Adams at Carbon March 28 was concluded in the Circuit Court at Brazil and given to the jury. After remaining out until 2 o'clock in the morning the jury brought in a verdict convicting the defendant of manslaughter. Judge McGregor will pass sentence on him.

Find Big Field of Asphalt.

A large field of asphalt has been discovered lying under the east end of Logansport. The discovery was made while men were engaged in drilling for water and it is thought that the field joins that in the vicinity of Litchfield, Ill. The quality is of the best, being produced by upheavals, forcing the oil to near the surface.

Love's Dearest Moment.

Love's dearest moment is not when the hands
Are clasped in marriage, and the world looks on;
Nor yet when all the importunate world has gone,
And flaming passion like the archangel stands
Between two souls, and welds with fire the bands
Of impotent human law; nor when alone
Upon the morrow they and love are one,
Triune and chrismed, pure, as God's commands;
It is not in the many morrows' track
While love by loving grows more rich and wise
Till age counts up love's wondrous, wondrous sum,
Love's dearest moment is far back, far back—
When first they looked within each other's eyes,
And in the silence knew that love was come.

JUANITO.

A Tiny, Brown Hero, and His Reward.

By Edith Wagner.

The sun would soon set. Already there was a cool feeling in the air. It had been market-day in Puebla, and now the little family was going home to one of the Indian villages near Cholula. Hundreds of such groups were scattered along the road. Maria was running in a little dog-trot, carrying in her rebozo, on her back, Jesus. Jose, the father, was solemnly seated on a pile of garden-stuff on the back of the little burro. Lagging a little behind the mother came Juanito.

They all had heavy burdens. On the mother's back, beside the baby, was a load of corn, and her arms were full of oddly shaped and painted earthen jars and baskets. There was no outward and visible evidence of the father's load, but to do him justice it was so great he was unable to walk with it. Maria wore for a skirt a length of dark-blue cloth that came to her ankles, wrapped tightly about her back and hips, with a few folds in front. Twisted around her waist was the usual red cotton sash. On her head she had the tall straw hat that the Indian women wear; about her throat was a coral necklace. All the Indian women are clothed the same, the difference being in quality of material and degree of cleanliness.

The country people in Mexico have no children's modes. The little people look like grown-up people seen through the wrong end of an opera-glass. Juanito, with round, fat, brown face, white teeth, big mouth, and eyes which shone star-like from out a mop of black hair, was dressed exactly like his father in shirt and long trousers of unbleached cotton, with a red sash to hold his clothes up. A leather band went round his forehead and supported the pack he carried—a large enough burden for so wee a boy. In one little hand he carried his conical hat of coarse straw; with the other, as he trotted along, he tried to shift his load a bit, and so relieve himself. He did it slyly, for he did not want his father to think he was not a big man. Indeed he was—he would be five in a few days—and he was going to have a present on his saint's day, which was also his birthday. He could do as he wished with it. A centavo—a whole cent to spend on himself.

What would he buy with his cent? He had turned it over and over many times in his rudimentary brain. He hesitated between an earthen goose, with a whistle in the neck and a dulce—like our rock-candy. The goose would be an ephemeral thing at best, although the whistle—but that whistle could be heard a kilometer. A turn of the hand, however, and it was gone. There are kites which sing when they get up in the air, but, what riches are necessary. Four centavos for the kite and one for the string! He had thought carefully. He could buy the string at once and get the kite in four more saint's days, for surely he would go on having them, and it was likely Dona Ynes would always remember them. No! No! After all, the dulce was best.

His face grew brooding as he built his castle—founded on a cent. His mother should have a suck—two sucks, in fact. The baby could lick it, and Nito, the burro, but his father, no! For only yesterday had he beaten him for getting too much water on the clay to make the ollas. He closed his eyes in ecstasy; properly managed, the candy, which was of the durability of old red sandstone or the quartz it greatly resembled, should last, by licking delicately and sucking with moderation, until another birthday.

The sun was throwing long, golden lances across the plain of Cholula, with its scores of church towers. The family had finished the supper of frijoles and tortillas, risen from the spring, by the wayside, and resumed its journey. As before, the father led, jogging along on the burro; the mother running beside, bending forward from her load. Juanito, as his short legs grew more weary, fell farther behind. The mother looked over her shoulder several times, but she felt no uneasiness, for it had happened before that, being too tired to go on, Tio Pedrito had taken him to his jacal on his burro and brought him home in the morning.

The road made a sudden dip. On one hand was a deep barranca (steep ravine), the sides covered with shrubs and close growth. Juanito, boy-like, was seeing how near he could trot along the verge without losing his balance. He was as sure-footed as a mule, but a long serpentine root, the same ash-color as the soil, caught his foot in a loop, and in a moment he was twisted off his feet and rolling down the barranca. It so happened no one saw him, and little Indian stoic that he was, he made no sound.

When he reached the bottom, bruised and out of breath, a savage hand caught his throat and savage eyes met his. A few muttered words and the butt-end of a heavy revolver came down on the shaggy little head, and then to one side was brutally tossed the senseless heap. There were three of them crouched under an overhanging ledge—three sinister-looking bandits, wearing heavy felt hats, and with red blankets drawn across their mouths. They sat still until about the time all travel had ceased on the highway above. They were planning, in low voices, the division of the spoils when Juanito's hard little Indian head began to throb consciously. The first thing he heard to undertand was that Miguel was to turn the coach over exactly at that spot, and that Don Hypolite had the money for the year's pulque from his San Martin hacienda, and that Dona Ynes had been to a party in Puebla, and had on her mother's diamonds.

"If the fall does not kill," growled one, "a tap of the good friend here"—and Juanito heard him slap his pistol.

Juanito heard and, though sick and dazed, comprehended. He could not see how he could prevent it. He knew that when the coachman tipped the carriage down the barranca Dona Ynes would be hurt, and if she were not hurt enough they would kill her. Ah! he would not get his centavo if Dona Ynes was killed. The thought moved him—poor, little, dying baby!

He tried to raise himself, but the effort increased the deadly nausea. A night wind was blowing and rustled the leaves; under cover of that noise he could move freely; if he could keep from crying. And keep from crying he would, for even his short life had given him self-control and courage. He was not an American child, who screams when it is explained, kindly, that he cannot have the moon. He began to move, pulling himself up by inches, forced often to rest from sheer anguish, but never a moan was wrung from his lips by the torture.

Several hours must have passed before he reached the highway. When there, he could not tell which way to go. He had lost his sense of direction, always extraordinary in Indians. He thought he heard a shout from below, as though the men had missed him; so, without further cogitation, he dragged himself along the road. He was cold with an awful chill that struck out from the bones. The blood steadily ran down his face from the crack in his skull. He was afraid he was going in the wrong direction; before this he should have heard the clip, clip of the high-stepping black mares. His tongue was getting too big for his mouth, and his heart roared like a wild thing within him.

Suddenly he heard the rumbling of the carriage, and he fancied he could see the shining flanks of Don Hypolite's beautiful thorough-breds. He gave a cry, another, and another. They were driving rapidly—and driving by!

As they swept past, for the first time he burst out crying, and sank in the dust. Dona Ynes, inside the carriage, was jerking violently at the cord.

"Why does he not stop? Oh, papa, call Miguel to stop. Some one called me; some one is hurt by the road."

Don Hypolite put his head out and ordered Miguel to drive slowly back. The guilty scamp did so reluctantly. The carriage halted by the side of the little sobbing Juan, and Dona Ynes jumped out. She had dropped her fur coat, for the night was warm, and her bare arms shone milky-white through the meshes of a lace mantilla. The mantilla was fastened by a gold-and-turquoise comb to the high knot of dusky hair, and the curved edges flapped coquettishly about her roguish face.

Regardless of her satin ball-gown, she knelt in the dust by Juanito. After he had told her and Don Hypolite of the plan to rob and murder them, she carried him herself in her round arms to the carriage, while Don Hypolite, portly and courtly, in evening-dress, with a half-dozen decorations glittering on his breast, went back calmly, and pulled Miguel by the coat-collar off his seat. Relieving the rascal of his pistol and kicking him soundly, Don Hypolite took the reins and drove back to Puebla, leaving Miguel rubbing his aches and wondering how it happened.

The motion of the carriage so jarred the little pain-racked frame that Dona Ynes, thinking that it must be a matter of but a few moments, asked her father to stop. Juanito whispered to her that he could not breathe, that he wished to be outdoors, where he could see the stars; so Dona Ynes, tenderly holding the child, sat in the grass by the road.

Alas; he could breathe no better under the quiet stars. There was the croaking of frogs and the song of night-birds, and the soft wind rustling through the low shrubs. He lifted a wistful face, and with long, laboring breaths he managed to say:

"I want my centavo."

Dona Ynes, keeping back her sobs with difficulty, for she did not wish to distress the patient child, slipped a cent into his little hand. A smile of great sweetness and content stole over his wide mouth, and the tiny, brown fingers closed upon the cherished cent, never to open again.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Swallows In a Standpipe.

The standpipe which supplies the pressure for the Highland Park water system is 100 feet high and six feet in diameter. It is a cylinder of iron, open at the top, and is usually almost full of water. The other day great flocks of chimney swallows appeared in the village and began to look about for places in which to build their nests. Evidently the birds took the standpipe for an enormous chimney, built for their especial benefit. They were seen sweeping about over the top of it, while now and then one would dart down into its interior. It was noticed that, while many birds disappeared into the standpipe, none came up again, and finally it was decided to let the water out and investigate. Not less than two peck measures full of drowned chimney swallows were found at the bottom.—Chicago Tribune.

A Fish Story.

Several young persons were rowing in the creek at Bridgeport, N. J., at low water, when they noticed as they neared the mouth heavy ripples, and soon learned that large schools of shad were coming up. In fact, it was with difficulty that the boats plowed through. The river fishing was also heavy, the fish being large, some weighing six, seven and eight pounds, but the price soon took a drop to $10 per 100. The oldest fishermen claim they never saw the like.—Havre de Grace Republican.

The Universalist Church will endeavor to raise $200,000 for the new century.

GOWNS AND GOWNING

WOMEN GIVE MUCH ATTENTION TO WHAT THEY WEAR.

Brief Glances at Fancies Feminine, Frivolous, Mayhap, and Yet Offered in the Hope that the Reading Prove Restful to Wearied Womankind.

New York correspondence.

JUNE has brought into view the dainty summer dresses that have been so carefully planned in the past few weeks, and a remarkably varied showing is made. It does not seem as if there ever was a time when a woman could so surely or so easily have her dresses planned in such way that they will be characteristic of herself in good degree. It can't be done without considerable outlay, of course, for fashions that are made conventional by general and miscellaneous duplication are, as usual, the cheap ones. Yet a woman to whom wardrobe doesn't spell a dozen trunks full of fine dresses can manage at least one costume that she can be reasonably sure will not appear like an imitation of her neighbor's. That she can do this is explained in some measure by the variety of materials that are available. This is not a summer when two or three sorts of dress stuffs are being run to death, and the list of fashionable fabrics is very large. But the feature that is more potent than the range of fabrics is the existing variety in cut and finish. Here, again, there is no one style that everybody is rushing into. True, the sheath fit of skirt is well nigh imperative, but in other respects the range of styles permitted in skirts is suggested by these pictures, wherin is no one much like another; and as for bodices, the field of permissible arrangements is quite as extended.

As to the upper half of you, the wisest course in selection is to be guided by the needs of the figure. This can be taken with almost entire literalness, once the fashions have been carefully examined and kept in mind. One who prefers the blouse to its would-be successor the straight-front bodice, can stick to it and feel perfectly safe. It is considered as pretty as ever. It suits the slender figure, adapts itself to the requirements of summer materials as well as to heavier goods, and is always comfortable. Though it has been a favorite for three seasons, there are new forms of it that are all right. The initial shows one. It was cut low at the neck and open to the waist to show a contrasting yoke and an extension to the belt. It was as simple and becoming as could be. This season the yoke is of open work lace and the collar will usually be a perfectly simple folded affair of lawn without ear-tabs or back frill. Very often there is a suggestion of waistcoat, the edges of which seem to show in little lines of contrasting material down the front of the outer bodice or in a pair of turn-back revers. Sometimes a pair of such revers are fastened on under the collar without any further pretense at waistcoat and are valuable only as relief of colors. Orange velvet was used in this way for this model, with cream lace, the goods being putty colored cloth. White or even butter colored lace could be used on goods of this color, and any light colored stuff could be employed after this manner.

A great many summer dresses are not more elaborate than was this simple blouse design. Indeed, the number of dresses that include new fancies yet that are in the simple gown classification is usually large for this time of year. Lawn dresses may be made in as severe outlines as though they were of heavy cloth if only there is apparent in their trimming some late wrinkle in the way of trimming. Shirred ribbon is about the most serviceable of these notions, and for use on lawn dresses there is a new lawn ribbon. Sheer lawn is made into narrow strips, finished with a selvage and has a draw cord or thread either in the center or a little below one edge. Fluffy and dainty as gauze is, it is not as suitable as the lawn ribbon, which comes not only in white but in delicate shades. As a rule it is run in several rows on a band of white. As employed on a dress of blue and white lawn it appears in the first gown of the next illustration. Yoke and collar were tucked white mull. Will such a dress wash? Indeed not! The wash dress of 1899 is not for the tub, but after being worn two or three times is sent to the cleanser's. While there its owner wears another of her wash dresses.

Another decorative use of lawn has made good headway. Designs and scrolls are cut from white lawn whose edges are finished with shirred baby ribbon, and are applied on smooth cloth or silk. The next of these models had this treatment and was what is now styled a tailor taffeta. Its color was gray-blue, and its bodice was trimmed with applications of the sheerest sprigged white lawn cut in scrolls, laid flat and edged with drawn white satin baby ribbon. The lawn was so sheer that the color of the silk showed through. Embroidered white satin simulated a waistcoat edge above the double shield front of this bodice, and its long yoke was of the muslin. The black of the picture stands for black velvet and was an up-to-date application. Get a little black velvet on somehow seems to be the rule, and this treatment was better than rosettes or bows of narrow ribbon which already threaten to be overdone. Another significant feature of this gown was that with its bodice characterized by advanced fashions went a plain skirt.

Wash or India silk is as pretty this year made up with a slightly bloused round bodice opening over a lawn yoke as it was last season. Blue and white designs prevail again, and green, yellow, red and violet, each with white, all appear. There is a decided fancy for finishing the top of the silk bodice with revers of needlework and lace and having corresponding treatment at the cuffs, no matter of what material or style the yoke may be. The wash silk dress the artist put here was blue and white, with yoke and collar of white tucked lawn, the tucks running horizontally except just in front. Such yokes are very stylish and pretty. From looking at this dress one would almost think that her last year's silk would do for this season. The trouble is that its skirt was made with insertion to effect an overdress, and the gown below the insertion flared according to the fashion of this, and not of last, summer. To be sure, one can make last year's skirt the overdress to a skirt that shall match the yoke. That will be pretty, but her best friend will surely know it for a make-over, because probably she has one herself of the same kind.

As was hinted in the foregoing, the employment of black velvet on summer dresses is peculiar. That will be readily understood after reading a description of the fifth of these of these pictured dresses. First it should be understood that it was planned for a viewer of races or other out-door sports, so its distinctly unexpected features were not so startling as though it had been intended for other use. Remember, too, that black velvet is used by fashion leaders on organdie in rows and on pique in frills, so don't be alarmed at unusual developments. The gown was a wonderful creation of tucked India mull made in combination with a filmy lace, the whole in a soft ivory-white. The two octopus-like rosette bows of black velvet enclosed handsome buckles of pearl, which were all that harmonized with the rest. This get-up was extravagant both in its scheme and price, and it is not held up as a model for copying. But it does serve well to point the fact that black velvet can be used safely in original ways. As a method of giving an up-to-date touch to a costume it is worth remembering.

Exquisites are becoming more and more averse to appearing outdoors without a wrap, this in all seasons. Spring saw this fashion develop noticeably, and there is promise that its adherents are braced for considerable discomfort in midsummer, for though some of the wraps are gauzy in the extreme, others are so elaborated that they can but be a burden at times. As a medium for making the costume look novel, they are strictly first class. The one shown here was white taffeta, made on an Irish crochet yoke. Its roll collar faced with innumerable hand-made frills of white lawn, the dainty flounces finished to match.

She sighed, as girls will sometimes, and then said:

"There are moments when I feel as if I would hesitate even if the best man in the world asked me to marry him."

Hereditary Strength of the Ox.

The strength of an ox in pulling a load is remarkable. How did it learn to pull so marvelously? Without doubt this quality is traceable to the habit found among all wild cattle of waging war with their horns. At Chillingham Park, in Northumberland, England, where there is still a herd of half-wild cattle, it is found that the bulls engage in desperate tussles for the leadership of the herd. Plainly any ambitious beast which has not sufficient strength of neck to thrust his enemy backward would be beaten in the struggle, and would have but few descendants. From age to age the strong-necked bulls have been victorious, and now the quality has become a proverb.

God's Design.—God has designed us for better things than this world can give—its honors and distinctions are temporal and fade away.—Rev. Benjamin F. Fritz, United Brethren, Columbus, Ohio.

Real Work of Life.—The real work of life, lament as we will, complain as we may, must be done, not upon the mountain, but in the valleys.—Rev. George L. Perrin, Universalist, Boston, Mass.

Individual Life.—The mind and body are separate and distinct factors in individual life, but although their relations are intimate, the mind dominates the body.—T. B. Wilson, Theosophite, Kansas City, Mo.

Right and Duty.—There is no right that is not pillared on a corresponding duty, and only he who performs that duty is entitled to the enjoyment of its corresponding right.—Dr. E. G. Hirsch, Hebrew, Chicago, Ill.

The Early Christians.—The intense love of the early Christians stood out in contrast with the selfishness of the world like the verdure of paradise surrounded by a desert.—Rev. J. H. O. Smith, Christian Church, Chicago, Ill.

Spiritual Life.—That spiritual life whose expansion is to continue forever comes to the hour of death as the heir reaches his majority, or the scholar his day of graduation.—Rev. H. M. Booth, Presbyterian, Auburn, N. Y.

Instruments of Power.—When God has a monopoly of us, when we have so given ourselves up to him that he has absolute control of us, then we become instruments of power.—Rev. John F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Savior's Truth.—We believe, and, indeed, we know, that God has given us our feeling of the infinite that we may individually work out our destiny by the Savior's truth and love.—Rev. Mr. Webber, Universalist, Rumford Falls, Vt.

Synonymous Terms.—In our everyday life trust, confidence and faith are practically synonymous terms. Trust, or confidence, is absolutely necessary to the welfare and stability of human society and human government.—Rev. T. Jefferson Danner, Episcopal, Pittsburg, Pa.

The Progress of Truth.—Humanity has cause for thankfulness that the social and political conditions which now exist offer little, if any, real obstruction to the progress of truth. This is especially true of our own land.—Rev. George W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City, Mo.

Theological Reaction.—The persecution of Dr. Briggs is not an indication of theological reaction, but of ignorant recalcitrants and the stupid ambition of individual leaders. Not one among all his persecutors dares question his honesty or integrity. What is worse, not one of them dares come forth and challenge his conclusions.—Rev. Henry Frank, Independent, New York City.

Limits of Liberty.—What are the limits of liberty in the Protestant Episcopal Church? Those limits are the limits of the great catholic creeds. These creeds are two, the Nicene creed and the Apostles' creed. These creeds (accepted by the church universal up to the age of the Reformation, still accepted by the largest portion of Protestantism), and these alone, limit our liberty of thinking.—Rev. Dr. Heber Newton, Episcopalian, New York City.

Criticism of the Church.—Nothing is more evident from the New Testament than that persons who claim to be led by the spirit are called to submit the claims to the church for examination and criticism. Those who profess to be called by the Holy Ghost to the ministry are put under a three years' training. It is not enough that the candidate himself is persuaded of his call. The church must be convinced.—Rev. Dr. Benjamin F. De Costa, Episcopalian, New York City.

A Scientific Definition.

A new definition of science is implied in a story lately told by Canon MacColl: "A friend of mine once shared the box-seat with the driver of a stage coach in Yorkshire, and being a lover of horses, he talked with the coachman about his team, admiring one horse in particular. 'Ah,' said the coachman, 'but that 'oss ain't as good as he looks; he's a scientific 'oss.' 'A scientific horse,' exclaimed my friend, 'what on earth do you mean by that?' 'I means,' replied Jehu, 'a 'oss as thinks he knows a deal more nor he does.'"—New York Post.

An Odd Burial Custom.

Some of the inhabitants of New Guinea have an odd way of disposing of their dead. They place the bodies on raised platforms at some distance from their dwellings, and when the flesh has disappeared the skulls are removed to and stored in a cabin for that purpose.—Spare Moments.

"Who is Aguinaldo?" asked Maud. "Why, don't you know?" responded Mamie. "He's a Malay." "Oh, yes! How stupid of me. One of those people who come from Malaria."—Washington Star.

"Pa, does a boat always run faster on its trial trip?" "Yes, my boy." "Then Aguinaldo must be making trial trips every hour."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A DASTARDLY CRIME.

Jake Helms of Garrett Behind the Bars to Answer for the Worst of Crimes.

Jacob Helms of Garrett can thank his lucky stars and prompt action on the part of the officers that his worthless carcass is not now ready to be buried out of sight of decent people, and it is more than probable that he will soon be placed where his fiendish passions can be curbed and innocent children protected from his brutal assaults. Helms, who is a widower with three children, stands charged with the most horrible crime known to the law, that of rape; the evidence against him is so convincing and overwhelming that there seems to be no loophole for his escape from just and severe punishment

From a gentleman conversant with the facts in the case we learn that Helms was arrested at Garrett yesterday on a charge of unlawful attempted assaults upon the persons of two little daughters of a man named Smith, aged respectively nine and eleven years, and that as a result of these assaults the little girls are in a serious physical condition. It seems that the fiend in human form had upon several occasions taken advantage of the youth and innocence of the little girls to gratify his brutal passions, but it was not until a day or two ago that their real condition was discovered. Soon after Helms had been placed in the city prison at Garrett Sheriff Hathaway was notified and he at once prepared to go after the prisoner. Before he reached Garrett, the news of the crime had spread throughout the city and naturally great excitement was caused. A large crowd gathered at the street near the lockup and for a time it was feared that Helms would be taken out and summarily dealt with, but the lack of a leader and the wise council of cool-headed citizens prevented the outbreak. When Mr. Hathaway was ready to return to Auburn with his prisoner the crowd had considerably increased, but no attempt was made to interfere with his removal. It was evident, however, from expressions heard on all sides, that had Helms' incarceration in jail been delayed an hour or two his chances for seeing the dawn of another day would have been very slim.

Helms, who bears an unsavory reputation, has resided in Garrett for a number of years. He is a carpenter by trade and for some time was employed in the B. & O shops. He has had more or less trouble through infractions of the law and bears the reputation of being a pretty tough citizen. When placed in jail last night, the prisoner refused to make any definite answers in regard to the awful charge made against him, except to say he had done nothing. It is certainly a terrible affair and most revolting in all of its details, and if after a full and impartial investigation Helms is found guilty he should be given such punishment as will be a lesson to others of his class.

Helms has not had a preliminary hearing.

Drowned at Hogback Lake

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER

ANGOLA, IND. June 12.—Yesterday a party of four or five young couples from Hudson drove to Hogback lake four miles west of Angola. Two young men, Cary Snowberger and the 20-year-old son of Dr. Kimmel, went in bathing; young Kimmel was drowned in fifteen foot of water. Snowberger was about to sink when rescued by some fishermen. The drowned man's sister was one of the party. Mr. Kimmel was a member of Co. I., 157th Ind. Vol. Reg't. and was a popular young man. He drowned about 3 o'clock and the body was recovered at 5 o'clock. Two Angola men witnessed the sad affair.

Since the above was in type, Joe Foreman, Ed. Rohrabaugh, Charles and John Picker of this place give more particulars. They were on the lake, and not far away. The young men were diving from their boat and Kimmel finally failed to come up. His friend noticed this, and started to get their boat which was floating off. Becoming exhausted, he called for help. John and Charles Picker hurried to him in time. Then all gathered in to find Kimmel. They located him with a pole, and Ed Rohrabaugh and Joe Foreman fixed up some fish hooks with which they raised the body, after it had been in the water over an hour

Commissioners' Court

The commissoners have to appoint a superintendent of the Poor Farm this term, and it will be for a term of two years instead of one, as heretofore. But the first under the new law will serve for but 1½ years and so get the term to end January 1. Mr. Bartels has been an excellent man for the place, but we are told he does not care to stay longer. Besides there is a difference of opinion as to salary. Mr. Bartels receives $600 and the Board, we understand hope to secure a man for $500 It was on this business that they went into Jackson township Saturday.

HIS NECK SAVED

LYNCHING OF HELMS AVERTED BY THE PROMPT ACTION OF SHERIFF HATHAWAY.

PRISONER SPIRITED AWAY,

Depriving An Enraged Mob of Tneir Intended Victim.

By the coolness and prompt action of Sheriff Hathaway and his deputies, DeKalb county has been saved the disgrace of mob violence and Jake Helms, whose awful crime is familiar to our readers, is still permitted to live though in close confinement.

The rumors that the brutal assaults by Helms upon two little girls at Garrett would be avenged by the people of that place were confirmed last night as there appeared on the streets of Auburn a party of determined men, about 250 in number, whose openly expressed purpose it was to take Helms from the county jail and hang him to the nearest tree. At an early hour last evening the crowd began congregating in the ball park at Garrett, and when the time came to start for Auburn several well known citizens were selected as leaders. Carriages, wagons and bicycles were pressed into service and many who could not secure transportation in that way came over on the late train. Arriving in Auburn the crowd gathered near Evergreen cemetery to prepare for the work laid out for them.

A quiet tip to Sheriff Hathaway, however, put that officer on his guard and before the would-be avengers reached town he had placed his thorough-frightened prisoner in a buggy and spirited him away, his destination being kept a close secret from even the sheriff's deputies and family. Shortly after midnight an unusual stir was noticed on the streets and the mob soon appeared, marching up town in a quiet and orderly manner. Going to the jail the leaders made a demand for Helms but were informed that he was not there. This statement was met with derision and threats to demolish the building, when the men were invited to make a thorough search. The jail doors were thrown open by Mrs. Hathaway and a committee given free access to all parts of the building, including the engine room and dungeon, but without success. After searching every nook and cranny the men were forced to acknowledge that they had been outwitted and though no violent demonstrations were made the mob was none the less enraged and determined to wreak summary vengeance on their intended victim. After a second thorough search had been made the crowd departed, but not until after the declaration was openly made that any attempt to give Helms a trial in this county would be frustrated and a lynching would follow.

The determined character of the mob was evidenced by the fact that an attempt made by Deputy Sheriff Hartford to reach Sheriff Hathaway and his prisoner with a double carriage was frustrated by his being closely followed by a party of men on bicycles who gave him no chance to get out of town. Finding that he could not reach the appointed rendezvous Mr. Hartford sent a trusted messenger to notify the sheriff of the situation and then succeeded in throwing the men off the track by driving west in the direction of Avilla, being followed nearly to the county line. It being evident that Helms had been removed beyond their reach the mob returned to Garrett and at 3:00 o'clock all was again quiet, although there was but little sleep in the sheriff's household. When manacled and taken from the jail by Sheriff Hathaway Helms showed the great fear he had of violence and though assured of all possible protection seemed to have lost all self-possession which has characterized his demeanor since his incarceration. He was more than willing to accompany the sheriff anywhere and doubtless breathed much more freely when lodged in safer quarters and out of the reach of those who sought his life.

It is indeed fortunate that this attempt to override the laws of the state was foiled without any bloodshed, and it is to be hoped, notwithstanding the grave nature of the crime with which Helms stands charged, that the men engaged in last night's work will give the matter a sober second thought and allow the law to take its course. They can rest assured that the prisoner will be given a fair and impartial hearing, if not in Auburn at some other place, and when adjudged guilty will receive a sentence commensurate with the terrible crime that has been committed against innocent children. Mob violence will be averted at all hazards and these men, while they have had terrible and probably just provocation, should rember that they are citizens of one of the most enlightned counties in the state and that their own good name as well as that of the county and state is at stake. Let justice be done through the law but not through the court of Judge Lynch.

CLUB NOTES

The L. L. C. met with Mrs. Lackey last Saturday and enjoyed a very pleasant, profitable afternoon. The attendance was large showing that the interest of the members has not decreased as the club year is nearing the close. Miss Hague gave a very interesting exercise she having drawn a map of the United States, and marked by lines and stars the route and places that the club had visited this year. It was greatly enjoyed by all. The rest of the afternoon was given up to Mrs. Lottie Cochran, of Tucson, Arizona, but who had been put on the program for a letter from Arizona, and who is here visiting, and she gave a talk instead, which proved to be of absorbing interest. Her descriptions of the old missions, old houses and old towns, inhabitants and customs were fine. She gave many details that people generally want to know, the little incidents of daily life, just how the people live, how they eat and how they sleep, etc. Many of the members asked questions which brought out other facts that were of great interest. The club was fortunate in having Mrs. Cochran here in person to give her work. Mrs. Sprott gave a "three minute talk," and gave a description of the Washerwoman's club that she and Mrs. Willis visited in Terre Haute. Mrs. Johns, of Toledo, was present as a visitor and made welcome by the club. Two more meetings remain of the year and they are full of work. Club adjourned to meet with Mrs. Ralston next Saturday.

OBITUARY

Jacob Walborn was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, on the 14th of March, 1832, and departed this life at his home in Auburn on North Jackson Street, June 10, 1899, at the ripe age of 67 years, 2 months and 26 days. Mr. Walborn was the 12th of thirteen children, three of whom preceded him to the spirit world. He lived with his parents until he was united in marriage to Letitia Briggs, on the 2d of Nov. 1854; to them were born three children, two of whom are still living. In Sept. 1864, he with his family moved to Auburn, Ind., into the home he has since occupied. The first two years of his sojourn here, he was in the employ of Mr. Christopher Shaffer as cabinet maker, then taking up the carpenter trade. This trade he followed for twenty years, accumulating during this time a good deal of property. He was an excellent and skilled workman, always trying to please his patrons. His executive ability being recognized, was, on the retirement of George Hazard as president of the First national bank, elected to fill the vacancy and served two years, bringing the bank from its precarious condition to a substantial footing. Having disposed of his stock in the First national bank, he with others organized the Farmers bank, with which he was prominently connected for several years. He was held in the highest esteem by the stock holders, who had the utmost confidence in his financial ability. About this time he was elected as a member of the school board of Auburn, and acted as secretary during his term of office. He occupied the position of Justice of the Peace for twenty years, which office he filled in a creditable and impartial manner. In the death of Mr. Walborn, Auburn loses one of her best citizens, the people, an able and conscientious justice, and the church a generous and consecrated Christian life. While he lived an exemplary life and sought no public career, he was ambitious for the promotion of a better citizenship, taking an active part in the progress of Christ's kingdom, and always a leader in the church of his choice. In all the years he has been a resident of Auburn, his services have been in request in various important relations, and it only required to be known that a matter was left to his superintendence to find willing acquiescence. Whether it was the view of a disputed drain course, the auditing of the books of the town officials, the presidency of a bank, the superintendency of building a business block, or the construction of a bridge abutment, administrator of an estate, the matter was carefully considered and satisfactorily settled. His executive ability in business affairs was of a superior character, and in questions of vital importance whether in court or church, he was just, impartial, and always did what he thought was right, regardless of what people might say. He largely shared in all efforts to advance the growth and prosperity of Auburn. to educate its youth, and to promote the social elevation and happiness of his neighbors and fellow-citizens. He was regarded as a safe and conservative business man, and during his several terms as a Justice of the Peace, his decisions were ever accepted as unbiased and just. He has been of and among the people, and his life has not been spent without honor. Auburn and his church are better for having such a useful and faithful life in them. Mr. Walborn was of Lutheran parentage, and was baptized and catechised and brought into the church when seventeen years old. Many times in prayer meeting, when giving his testimony for Christ, did he refer to that day when he was saved. After coming to Auburn. he longed to worship in the church of his choice, and began to arrange for a place in which to hold services. On the 26th of October, 1875, a meeting was called at his own home for the purpose of establishing a Lutheran church. The organization was completed, he being one of the charter members. During the years that have come and gone, he has watched the growth of the church, and was ever an untiring worker in his Master's vineyard. The great concern of his life was the betterment of men and women, the upbuilding of the church of God, and the exaltation of Christ. He was a friend of the young people, always seeking their highest good, and always willing to give any assistance when needed. His life has been of inestimable value to the church, and his influences will continue to live through the coming years. For a number of years Brother Walborn represented this church in the annual meeting of Synod, always taking an active part in the interests of the work of Christ. Three times has he represented the district Synod in the General Synod, the highest legislative body in the Lutheran church. Two years ago he was elected by the Synod as director to Wittenberg college located in Springfield, Ohio, in which capacity he was serving at the time of his death. He has been a member of the church council ever since the organization of the church, and has been a faithful teacher in the Sabbath school since its beginning. Not only did he give his prayers and service, but he also gave freely and liberally of his substance, and when standing in the darkening shadows of death, he bequeathed $1000 to his church. Before he lost his speech, one morning he said to his young pastor, "my work on earth is done, I have everything arranged. and am ready to depart." Thus comes to a close a useful and excellent life, and of him it may be said, "He has fought a good fight, he has finished his course, he has kept his faith, and he has now entered upon his rest with his God. In the death of Brother Walborn this church loses one of its strongest pillars, for on him we all leaned for counsel and advice. At this time our prayer is that God may raise up another life to take up the work where he left off. As friends and as a church we must look to God for support, and bow in humble submission to His holy will. Let us depart from his grave thoughtfully, ever striving to emulate the virtues of his life, and to labor more earnestly for the glory of God and the saving of lives. Mr. Walborn was a faithful husband, a kind father and a loyal and true citizen. He leaves to mourn his death a companion, two daughters, four grand-children, three brothers and five sisters; besides many who hold him in the highest esteem, who will ever cherish his memory. The funeral service was conducted from the Lutheran church, Monday June 12, 1899, at 3:00 p. m. Interment took place in Evergreen cemetery. Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating, assisted by Revs. T. M. Guild and Henry Arlen.

AT THE ALTAR

At 8:30 this morning, occurred the wedding of two prominent and popular young people. Dr. J. P. Collett, of St. Marys, Ohio, was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Ford, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Ford. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Henry Arlen, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Auburn, of which the bride is a member, the groom being a member and officer of the same church at his home. The interesting ceremony was witnessed by about forty invited guests, chiefly the near relatives and intimate friends.

At 8:30 precisely, the wedding march was played by Miss Edna Davis and the bride and groom took their places in an arbor of green sprays and flowers, above them being a beautiful floral bell. It was the impressive and solemn ring ceremony and when they were pronounced man and wife, came the congratulations and good wishes.

Then followed an elegant breakfast in four courses, which elicited praise from the best judges of the culinary art and it was daintily served. At its conclusion the happy couple took a carriage, and accompanied by a number of their young friends went to the Wabash train for Indianapolis. At the conclusion of their wedding tour, they go to housekeeping at their future home, at St. Marys, Ohio.

Among the guests from out of town, was the grandfather, G. W. Lewis of Hicksville, Mrs. Lottie Cochran and daughter Mary, of Tucson, Arizona; Mrs. N. H. Weaver, Attica, Ind.; Miss Della Kyle, Miss May Coulter and Miss Daisy Zeiss of Hicksville; Chas. Collett of Ansonia, Ohio. Regrets were received from Miss Clara Hale, Geneva, Ind.; Mr. and Mrs. Samuels of Muncie; Mr. and Mrs. H. I. Scott and Miss Lillian Blood of Indianapolis and Mrs. Anna Park of Kendallville.

The wedding gifts were many and very fine. Among them was a set of solid silver table spoons, the gift of the bride's great-great aunt at Albany, N. Y. The favors were the personal cards of the bride and groom tied with a white ribbon and holding a marguerite, her name flower.

The bride is a young lady of great worth and accomplishments, very popular with her neighbors old and young. Having been an employe of the COURIER office for some time she had won the good will of all, and their heartiest good wishes go with her. The groom is a prominent young business man in his city, standing high in church and social circles, as well. Their future is certainly a bright one, and we all wish it may be.

COURT NEWS

Judge Hartman Monday morning gave a decision in the Carnahan case, that Mrs. Carnahan must cut no more live timber, but can haul off what is already cut.

The jury returned a verdict in the case of Lung vs Weidler. Weidler had board at Lung's while handling milk. He bought milk of the Lungs as well as of others, and it is claimed he did not settle fully, though the main thing was to make him pay his board. The jury decided he ought to pay Mrs. Lung $25. Rose & Rose were her attorneys; Mountz was attorney for Weidler.

The first of the two struck juries are trying the first case against the Fort Wayne City Railway, July 5, '97. Hans Beitdorff and a number of other boys were diving from a spring board at the swimming place at Robison Park. Hans dove and struck his head on a stump that had been left in the bottom of the river. Hans did not come up and they dove and got him. He was limp, like a man stunned, rather than a man drowned. The case is brought to make the Company pay damage for leaving stumps and logs in the water they had prepared for people to bathe in. The jury as made up is: J. P. McCague, H. B. McCord, J. L. Grubb, A. Foster, D. Herrick, O. Clark, H Deetz, C. H. Baber, Peter Ditmar, T C. Stafford, Wesley Fulton and Joseph Hull. Roby and Ninde are for plaintiff and Rose & Rose and Sam Morris for the defendant Co. The men on the jury are the ones drawn except McCord, who took the place of of A. G. Jones.

Hagenau, the man who stole chickens from parties at the Junction, has finished his term in jail and is out now. Chickens are again roosting high down that way.

BUTLER.

Died at his home at Butler, Indiana, June 8, 1899, after a lingering illness of thirteen weeks, in the seventy-fifth year of his age, William H. Madden. Hon. William Harrison Madden was born at Mt. Vernon, Wayne county, Ohio, April 8, 1825. His father, John Madden, soon after his birth removed to Freeport, Harrison county, same state where he engaged in the mercantile business assisted by the deceased. After having received a good common school education he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. John E. Charles of New Cumberland; 1847, he came to this county and practiced medicine in the vicinity of what is now Butler. He remained here but a few months when he returned again to Ohio and continued his practice in his native state. In 1849 he returned to this county and commenced his practice again in the same vicinity. In 1853, the Northern Indiana railroad was projected in this direction and Brainard's corners then became a village and after its founder, John Norris, was named Norristown, and Dr. Madden became its first postmaster. On April 13, 1857, he was united in marriage to Isabel Walter, daughter of Peter Walter who then lived in a cabin on the farm now owned by Jones Aldrich. Five of their seven children survive. His wife preceded him in death several years. Mr. Madden, after having a term as postmaster, was elected justice of the peace In 1876. he was elected to the Indiana legislature on the democratic ticket and did good service in that distinguished body of statesmen. His funeral which was very largely attended, took place last Saturday from the M. E. church of which he had been a faithful member for a dozen or more years. Rev. Frech officiating. His remains were laid to rest in Butler's beautiful cemetery. Dr. Madden was a man of fixed and almost unalterable convictions a man of sterling integrity, a firm friend a wise counselor, a good physician and neighbor, consistent christian, a good father and husband. Peace to his ashes.

The Roann Hoop Factory.

Some of our readers may be interested in knowing something about the plant and business of the Roann Cooperage Manufacturing Co., at that place as it is owned by three young business men of Auburn, Charles McClellan, A. C. Robbins and W. C. Hartman, the last named being general manager.

They are located at Roann, fifty-six miles west of Auburn on the Wabash. The factory turns out over 1,000,000 hoops a month, besides about 400,000 staves and a large amount of chair plank. Over $1000 a week is paid out for labor and timber. A complete saw mill is connected with the plant, using over 15,000 feet of timber a day. This timber in part is hauled direct to Roann, and the rest comes in on flat cars from stations along the Wabash. Counting the teamsters, eighty-five men are constantly employed, and the plant will run fifteen hours a day all summer. Hoops and staves are out at the same time and the entire output is sold and shipped as fast as it gets dry.

During May over 1½ car loads of stock left the factory on an average every day. Nearly 100 men are employed just at present, seventy on the factory and yard pay roll alone. They have a scaler who visits other towns regularly, settles with haulers and attends to loading the logs onto cars. They have a factory foreman, a yard foreman, a book keeper, two timber buyers. A visit there recently, showed four cars of their products were shipped out, and five cars more were loading for next day. A busier plant would be hard to find and Roann is fortunate to have such an industry.

Dear Sir:—I was afflicted with that common scourge—"Lagrippe," and had violent paroxisms of coughing from which I could get no relief until upon the recommendation of Rev. E. L. I have taken two bottles and now consider myself cured, and I always recommend it to all my friends who are similarly afflicted, for I know it to be good. Very truly yours,

PURE FOOD SCARCE.

NINETY PER CENT OF THE SUPPLY IS ADULTERATED.

Startling Revelations Brought Out by the Senate Investigating Committee —Enormous Amount of Fraudulent and Poisonous Products Produced.

If there is any pure food manufactured or sold in this country, the Senate Pure Food Investigating Committee, which took testimony in Chicago, did not come across it. The evidence in the hands of that committee tends to show that nearly all the commoner articles of food are adulterated by the manufacturers, and some of them with deleterious and dangerous substances. One of the witnesses, Dr. H. H. Wiley, chief chemist in the Department of Agriculture, went so far as to tell the committee that 90 per cent. of the liquid and solid foods consumed by the people of the United States are adulterated. And Dr. Wiley said this statement was based on his personal investigation. He had, so he told the committee, examined and tested almost every article of food and drink bought and sold in the country, and he explained to the investigators the results of his tests.

For instance, he found "pure" alcohol that had been made of menthol and wood sap; brandy that had been manufactured of burnt sugar and water; bread that had been made of potato flour, and even then adulterated with alum and sulphate of copper, substances dangerous to the health of the consumers of that sort of bread; cider made of tartaric acid and colored with caramel; candy made of glucose and artificial essences and colored with poisonous substances; canned goods which had been preserved with salts of copper; butter which had been manufactured from ordinary animal fats and starch, and in which there was an excess of salts; beer that had been made of burnt sugar, licorice, quassia and grains other than barley; cheese that had been made of oleomargarine, with salts of mercury in the rind; cocoa and chocolate that were compounded of sugar, animal fats, flour and starch and ferruginous earths; cayenne pepper that was made of ground rice and flour and salt and a sprinkling of red lead; flour that was made of alum and ground rice; cinnamon that was made of cassia and plain sawdust; ginger that was manufactured of mustard and tumeric; gin that was composed altogether of a mixture of water and sugar and alum and turpentine; honey in the comb that was made of glucose and cane sugar, with the comb molded of paraffin; lard that was made of starch and cottonseed oil and stearine, and containing alum and caustic lime; mustard that was compounded of flour and tumeric and chromate and sulphate of lead; artificial milk that was sold as 'pure condensed milk" and made of burnt sugar, annotto and water; fruit jellies that were made of gelatine and apple parings and flavored with artificial essences; mace that was made of bread dust and venetian red; pickles put up in salts of copper and alum; fruit preserves that were made of the common pumpkin and colored with dangerous substances; sago made of potato starch; powdered sugar, the base of which was rice flour, and which contained also salts of lead and tin, gypsum and marble dust; tea that was made of common leaves and treated with gypsum, china clay and soapstone; vinegar that was made of burnt sugar and sulphuric and hydrochloric acids; wines made of artificial alcohol and water and colored with anilines.

From the testimony of the witnesses before the committee it would seem that more time and ingenuity are expended in producing a counterfeit article than would be required to get nature to produce the real thing. The profit is in producing it in large quantity from waste substances. This is a sort of utilization of the by-product that the country cannot stand for any length of time without serious deterioration of the physical and mental strength of its people, and the status of these crimes and fit punishments for them will undoubtedly be fixed as a result of the report of this committee.

Many Adulterants Poisonous.

Many of the adulterations are of such a character as to injure the pocket of the consumer rather than the health. Commercial fraud, according to the testimony of the national and State government officials, is chiefly the result, but wholesale loss of life has occurred. In a report made by A. J. Wedderburn, a special agent of the Agricultural Department, he calls attention to many cases of death. The deleterious substances are usually used through ignorance, one case of record being that in which death resulted from the use of chrome yellow, not only to the customer, but also to the vender and the members of his family.

Coffee is perhaps the most extensively adulterated article. Consumers do not take the trouble to find out whether their coffee is genuine or not. Artificial coffee beans used to be manufactured with consummate care, but nowadays many producers do not attempt to imitate the beans except in color and size. Spurious coffee beans were formerly imported from Germany in large quantities and to some extent from France. But American manufacturers, realizing the profit to be made in the trade, entered the field and now make better imitations than any that are to be imported. Flour or almost any cereal is mixed with molasses and molded to resemble the bean and then roasted and colored. Sometimes chicory or burned sugar forms a part of the compound, which, although almost worthless, is not harmful when composed of such simple substances, but if mineral matter be added the product is often poisonous to some degree. A few years ago in France the Government seized a factory which employed sulphate of iron in its mixture.

Imitation coffee beans can be distinguished easily from the genuine by a careful examination. Molded as they are, the artificial beans present a uniformity of structure, which is entirely foreign to the real beans. Again, artificial coffee beans will nearly always sink when put in water, while genuine coffee floats. There are several simple and good tests for ground coffee. When a little of the coffee is taken and pressed between the fingers or squeezed in the paper in which it is bought, and it will not form a coherent mass, it is pretty sure to be genuine, but if the grains cake they are not coffee. Even chicory grains will stick to each other, for they are comparatively soft and open, and adhere without difficulty when squeezed. In water chicory and cereals will soften quickly like bread crumbs, while coffee will take a long time to soften; genuine coffee grains will float, as will the whole beans, but chicory or any other sweet root will soon sink. Chicory or caramel will cause a yellowish or brownish color to diffuse rapidly through the water, but pure coffee will not tint the water for a long time. Such tests are so simple that there appears little excuse for not trying them. Yet manufacturers sell to dealers tons of artificial coffee, which is accepted unquestioningly as the genuine article.

Spurious Stuff Is Possible.

Both manufacturers and retail grocers make enormous profits, for their fraudulent coffee can be made for as little as 3 or 4 cents a pound. Often the flour, crackers or cereals which enter into its composition are so badly damaged that they could be utilized in no other way. There is, besides, much huckstering in real coffees, and lower grades are frequently mixed with the higher. Thus Maracaibo and La Guayra coffees are mixed with Java and Mocha coffee and the mixture sold for pure Java or pure Mocha.

Cheap cream of tartar has been proved to be composed largely of tartaric acid and terra alba. This terra alba, or white earth, imported from the shores of the Mediterranean, has been used as a food adulterant to a fearful degree. It is, when pulverized, a white and almost impalpable powder, tasteless and looking like a fine starch. Its presence is frequently detected in powdered sugar, which may account for the fact that housekeepers do not find powdered sugar altogether satisfactory for cooking purposes. Pure cream of tartar will dissolve in hot water, but terra alba will not; therefore to test it put a teaspoonful into a tumbler of hot water, allow it to stand for a few moments, and then see whether there is any sediment. If the sediment is large, terra alba is probably present. If it does not dissolve, leaving the water clear, add a few drops of tincture of iodine to the water. If pure, the color will remain unchanged; but if starch is present the water will turn bright blue.

The usual adulterants of tea are "spent" or exhausted tea leaves, leaves of other plants like tea, sand and various materials used for coloring the leaves. Coloring is common and is called "facing." It generally consists in coating the leaves with powdered soapstone, with lead, or plumbago, if they are to be black, or with the powdered soapstone with indigo or Prussian blue if they are to be green. Often the facing adds materially to the weight of the tea. In England the use of exhausted leaves is much larger than it is in this country. Spent leaves are bought up from hotels and coffee-houses at merely nominal prices, and are dried and faced before being resold. They are easily detected by their frayed and irregular appearance and by the small proportion of soluble matter remaining in them.

The substitution of other leaves for those of the tea plant is also more common in England than in the United States. Yet even in this country it is well known that foreign leaves can easily be detected by spreading out a few of the leaves from the bottom of the teapot. The lanceolate, spear-head-like shape of the tea leaf, together with its serrated margin, distinguishes it from that of any plant used to counterfeit it. As a rule facings can be detected only by chemical tests. Green teas are oftener adulterated than black teas. Tea is often colored, and if the decoction made by the housekeeper becomes highly colored after being boiled a few minutes adulteration may be suspected.

List Practically Unlimited.

The list of articles adulterated and their adulterations is practically unlimited, as was stated by Prof. Wiley in his testimony before the Congressional Committee. The adulteration of coffee and tea will serve as types. It is stated that most of the spices sold are wholly fraudulent, as are most of the jellies. Perhaps half of the alcoholic liquors are prepared from neutral spirits doctored and colored to have the taste and appearance of the liquor demanded by the consumer. A type of this adulteration is the recipe given for "pure country cider." It is: To each gallon of water add one-half pound of granulated sugar, acidulate with tartaric acid, and flavor with oil of apple, previously put in alcohol, color with caramel, and to twenty gallons of the mixture add two gallons of genuine country cider.

Frequent cases have been reported of late years of sickness arising from the use of canned meats. The cause seems mainly to have been improper methods of canning, or the use of meat that was tainted before being canned. According to A. J. Wedderburn, of the United States Department of Agriculture, but little risk will be run by the purchaser who carefully examines the outside of the cans which he buys. The heads of the cans should be slightly concave, which shows that they were hot when sealed. If the heads are convex it shows that decomposition has commenced in the can.

The total value of the food supply of the United States has been estimated at $5,000,000,000. According to Dr. Wiley's estimate, 90 per cent. of this is adulterated, or $4,500,000,000. According to the American Grocer's figures, which are the most favorable, not more than 10 per cent. of the adulteration is harmful or injurious to the health. Taking these statements, the result shows that there is $450,000,000 worth of poisonous food products put annually on the country and $4,050,000,000 of fraudulent products.

YOUNG COXCOMB

Taught a Lesson by an Old Man from the Country.

He bore the customary resemblance to a rural visitor. There was the chin beard and the clean-shaven upper lip and the trousers that fell just below his ankles. No wonder the foppishly garbed youth at the end of the car snickered aloud when he entered.

All during the ride up Lincoln avenue the young man smiled at the aged gentleman opposite him. The latter fell to reading a newspaper, but now and then he would look over the top of it and meet the taunting eyes of the young man.

All of a sudden he laid the paper aside and arose from his seat. He grabbed one of the "hold-on" straps and tugged at it frantically. The conductor did not notice his attempt apparently to stop the car, but it nearly drove the young man into hysterics. "Oh, what a Rube!" the old man heard him mutter, and then as though the efforts of the aged gentleman had softened his heart he said: "I'll do it for you," and rising he pulled the motorman's bell. When he had tugged it the regular way the old man resumed his seat.

The car came to a standstill at the corner. The conductor opened the rear door, but no one inside moved.

"I guess it was that young feller over there," answered the old man, nodding toward the youth.

"D'ye wanter git off?" inquired the conductor, with a snap.

"Why, no," stammered the youth. "I thought that the elderly gentleman did, and I rang the bell for him. He was pulling one of those straps."

Every one saw the position the old man had placed the young man in and all eyes were turned on him.

He reddened. "What did you do it for?" asked the conductor, turning to the aged passenger. "I jest wanted to show a thing or two to that young coxcomb over there," was the reply. And he added as the youth ducked for the open door, "I guess I did it."—Chicago Democrat.

Very Busy.

May and Edith are sisters, 4 and 5 years old respectively. May had been very naughty, and mamma had taken her over her knee to administer corporal punishment, when Edith suddenly pushed the door ajar and peeped in. Turning her chubby face as far round toward her sister as her peculiar position would admit, May said very gravely:

"Go out, Edie; don't you see I'm busy?"

It is nedless to add that mamma granted a respite."

The great naval celebrity was on his way to the safe-deposit vaults with several installments of prize-money. "Hello!" exclaimed an intimate friend: "what have you there?" "These," replied the celebrity, "are the 'fortunes of war' that you read so much about." —Washington Star.

EX-GOV. ALTGELD'S WIFE.

Dislikes Social Functions and Loves Her Husband and Nature.

Mrs. John P. Altgeld, wife of the ex-Governor of Illinois, is a tall, dignified woman, and, like Mrs. McKinley, is somewhat of an invalid. Illness, not age, has silvered the hair that once was midnight black, writes a Chicago correspondent. This has only the effect of further softening a face that is wonderfully patient and beautiful. Her eyes are gray, her features are delicate and her mouth expressive. Her face is a mirror which speaks for every emotion she feels.

MRS. ALTGELD.

She has a poet's sensitive appreciation of nature and at last has realized the ambition of her life, to live "near to nature." For years she has tried to persuade Mr. Altgeld to move into the country, where they could have trees and grass and where "even the dirt is clean," as she expresses it. It is only recently, however, that her wish has been realized, and now she lives in a charming home in Rogers Park. She spends most of her time sitting on the broad veranda of her home, watching the leaves develop on the trees, which grow in abundance in that locality, weaving little imaginary stories about the golden dandelions blooming on the lawn and breathing the country air, laden with perfume of lilacs and wild currants. The roses have already begun to bloom again in her cheeks, and she will soon be her old self again under the magic influence of her surroundings. Mrs. Altgeld has no children. She loves her home and prefers the society of her husband to that of any outsider. While she was the first lady of the State is was necessary for her to entertain and go into society, but she has no taste for that kind of life. She dresses quietly, with a slight dash of color here and there, "just for cheerfulness." While she does not enter into politics, she takes a keen interest in Mr. Altgeld's successes and failures, and it is safe to say she has even been the ex-Governor's inspiration in everything he has undertaken.

TALKS ON ADVERTISING

Some seem to have the idea that advertising is an exact science—that unless a man has studied it he cannot make a success of it. They are wrong. Advertising is not an exact science. We know that the experts make it pay —and we know that others who are a long way from experts make it pay, too. When done in the right way and spirit, and placed in the right mediums, and stuck to perseveringly, it pays always. That is about all we know about it. It is so far from an exact science that no man can come to another man and show him just how, or where, or when an ad. will pay. These are things an advertiser must find out for himself, and the finding out takes time and is a difficult process. A man is liable to get lost, but if he does he may be sure that there is a way out, and that if he keeps pounding away he will find it sooner or later.—Shoe and Leather Gazette.

If you toot your little tooter and then lay aside your horn,
There's not a soul in ten short days will know that you were born.
The man who gathers pumpkins is the man who plows all day,
And the man who keeps a humping is the gent who makes it pay.
The man who advertises with a short and sudden jerk
Is the man who blames the printer because it didn't work.
The gent who gets the business has a long and steady pull
And keeps the local paper for years and years quite full.
He plans his advertisements in a thoughtful, honest way,
And keeps forever at it until he makes it pay.
He has faith in all the future, can withstand a sudden shock,
And like the man of Scripture has his business on a rock.

GREATEST HEAT.

Electrical Furnace Produces a Temperature that Breaks the Record.

The highest temperature yet produced by man has been reached by an especially constructed furnace at the Columbia University. Prof. Tuckerm, to whom belongs the honor of the experiment, had been working for years on the idea so successfully carried out and has finally generated heat 20 degrees higher than the record made some time ago by Prof. Moission of Paris. The heat of the sun is estimated at 10,000 degrees. The heat generated at Columbia was 6,500. The effect was tremendous. The electrical furnace was charged with a current of unusual power, which was so high that under it steel, hard quartz and even platinum were vaporized. As for ordinary crucibles, they disappeared at once in a little puff of smoke. It is difficult to appreciate the degree of such heat without some comparisons. Scalding water means a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit and red-hot iron 800 degrees. Steel melts at 3,000 degrees and boils like water at 3,500 degrees. Commercially the experiment is very useful because it has shown that diamonds of marketable size and purity may be made artificially. Further, it has given to commerce two products of almost incalculable value —calcium carbide and silicium carbide.

General Tracy's First Cigar.

General Benjamin F. Tracy, former Secretary of the Navy, and associate of General Benjamin Harrison in representing this government in the matter of the Venezuelan boundary dispute, finds his keenest enjoyment in smoking. During his recent voyage to Paris he passed a good deal of his time in the smoking-room of the steamer. But the general was nearly 50 years old before he acquired the taste for tobacco. Previous to that time smoking made him ill.

During the early '70s he was engaged as counsel in a celebrated case, and was compelled to devote not only the day but the greater part of the night to his task. Once when he was thoroughly fagged out an associate suggested that a cigar with his coffee might have a soothing effect. General Tracy succumbed to the temptation, and before he was aware of it had finished his third cigar. They seemed to quiet his nerves, and he was able to work over his papers the whole of that night. Since that time, perhaps out of gratitude for the effect of those three cigars, General Tracy has been a smoker.—Philadelphia Post.

Very aged persons are often afflicted with itching of the skin without a rash or manifestation of skin disease. This is generally due to weakened nerves, and may be mitigated by baths in warm water faintly tinged with carbolic acid—one teaspoonful of acid to a gallon of water.

Medicines do not very greatly change the effects of varicose veins in the leg. About the best alleviant is a silk elastic stocking. This evens the pressure in the limb and prevents the veins from dilating excessively.

Thin-blooded children who arise with headaches and dizziness in the morning may be greatly benefited by the administration of a half-teaspoonful of solution of albuminate of iron after meals.

A great many nervous people are alarmed at the presence of a fluttering feeling in the throat when they get excited—"a lump that cannot be swallowed." The lump is an imaginary one, due entirely to a slight constriction of the gullet, and may be mitigated with valerian or almost any mild nervine.

"Skin foods" are generally humbugs. There are no foods for the skin differing from foods for the entire body. Some persons, anxious to fill out the cheeks, rub on cod liver oil, but it is the rubbing only that develops the muscles of the face. Freedom from worry and plenty of rest, are the great complexion savers.

Calloused feet are produced by ill-fitting shoes and prolonged standing. They should be pared only when absolutely necessary, as frequent paring favors rapid growth. Soak the feet in hot alum water, one teaspoonful to the quart, every night, and protect the callous by a thin ring of felt.

GUN BARREL TEST.

Simple Method of Detecting an Irregularity After Boring.

In the manufacture of Krag-Jorgensen rifles at the Springfield Arsenal the drill, which has to pass through 30¼ inches of barrel, is provided with a 1-32-inch oilhole which extends through its whole length, and feeds oil directly at the point of the drill. This hole, which takes the place of the old channel cut along the side of the drill, says the Scientific American, is an improvement introduced by Major Taylor. The oil is forced through the drill by means of a small rotary pump, which forms part of the machine. Although the barrel rotates at a speed of 1,200 revolution per minute, the constant rush of cold oil to the head is sufficient to keep the drill and barrel perfectly cool, and it also serves to carry away the chips which issue in a constant stream from the rear bushing. The barrel is drilled to a diameter of 0.295 inch, and it takes 75 minutes to complete the operation.

PERFECT GUN BARREL.

BENT GUN BARREL.

The barrels are now taken to the straightening room, where the operator holds them up toward a white surface with a horizontal black line upon it and looks through the bore. If the bend is downward, the curved reflections of the black line on the surface of the bore will be convergent; if upward, they will be divergent. A few taps of the hammer quickly straighten the barrel until the reflected lines are perfectly true.

The Lunatic's Repartee.

Some visitors were being shown through Kew lunatic asylum, Victoria, a few days ago, and, coming opposite the clock in the corridor, one of them looking up quickly at his watch, said: "Is that clock right?" "No, you idiot," said a patient standing by; "it wouldn't be in here if it were right."—Melbourne Australasian.

Practical people should quit referring to a woman's husband as her "choice." There are too many cases where he was not a choice, but a necessity.

Business men are bothered so much with schemes that some of them condemn them all, without investigation

Between two evils some folks have no choice; they embrace them both.

Road Improvement.

The best way to improve and secure our ordinary country roads for comfort and convenience is the important question for the farmer to consider. One of the first important steps is to keep the bed of the road dry. This can be best secured by the action of the common road grader or leveler being used as soon as the surface is dry enough to crumble. The passage of the grader fills up all the ruts and depressions in the road and leaves the center well rounded up and thus enables it to shed the water. The road must be kept clear of water, hence the grader must be used after a rain when the clay will crumble. Now most of the road districts are supplied with these graders and the necessary machinery to make and keep the road in good repair, but too often the roadmaster lets the grader lie idle in some outlot or fence corner till he has an idle time to use it.

The great question arises, how can we retain good roads after they are graded? Here is where the question of permanent roads comes in. In the early history of our republic the national government built and took charge of the leading roads all over the nation. The most prominent of them was the Great National road connecting St. Louis with Washington. This is an improvement that any country might well be proud of. All the bridges, culverts, etc., were of solid masonry, and the road of good width and covered with broken stone. It was one of the primary causes for the settlement of the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. One of the best arguments in favor of good roads is it enhances the value of the territory they pass through.

In the State of Missouri the counties are waking up to the necessity of improving the ordinary highways, and the State is helping them to improve their roads. Many wish to have the farmers shoulder the burden of improving the roads, but this is by no means just, and when macadam or gravel is used to make the bed of the road solid it would be too heavy a tax on the farmers.—National Rural.

One of a Class.

A central New York paper tells of a town pathmaster who carefully turnpiked a stretch of road with crushed stone, to the joy of all who used it. The next year a new pathmaster covered the fine roadbed—the only good road in town—with a foot and a half of loose sand, laboriously dug from the bank by the wayside. Presumptuous persons who dared to criticize were withered by a scorching blast of profanity.—L. A. W. Bulletin.

Trade Diverted by Bad Roads.

The packers at some of the potteries of East Liverpool, Pa., had to stop work because the roads in the vicinity are so bad the farmers are unable to bring any straw for the packing of the pottery. It is probable straw will be shipped in by rail from towns possessing sufficient enterprise to maintain a system of passable highways.

No Benefit Without Effort.

No rural community that does not make some effort to procure good roads should expect free delivery of mails.

Silence Was No Longer a Virtue.

There is a time to keep silence, but it was evidently not the right time in the case of a boy who lives in a country town. He got a splinter into his foot, and, in spite of his protestations, his mother and grandmother decided to place a poultice over the wound. The boy resisted vigorously.

"I won't have any poultice," he declared stoutly.

As the hot poultice touched the boy's foot he opened his mouth.

"You——" he began.

"Keep still," said his mother, shaking her stick, while the grandmother applied the poultice. Once more the little fellow opened his mouth.

"——"

But the uplifted switch awed him into silence. In a minute more the poultice was firmly in place, and the boy was tucked up in bed.

"There, now," said his mother; "the splinter will be drawn out, and Eddie's foot will soon be well."

As the mother and grandmother moved away, triumphantly, a shrill small voice came from under the bedclothes, "You've got it on the wrong foot!"

Why the Teacher Was Late.

A young girl who teaches in one of the city schools is dreadfully afraid of cows. The school in which she is employed is somewhere out in the remote outskirts of the town, where a grazing cow is no uncommon sight. Even one cow gives the young teacher cold shivers, and when one morning she met a whole drove she fairly had heart failure. Not daring to pass through them and afraid to "shoo" them away, she stood and waited for them to go on. Time passed a great deal faster than the cows did, and the teacher was late for school. Her excuse for tardiness had to be set down in the roll-book. "Stopped by cows" had an air that was not at all satisfactory to her. What to set down she did not know. The principal was called in consultation, and the two heads together solved the problem. Opposite the young teacher's name on the roll-book one may now read the excuse, "Detained by a procession."

Unappreciated.

HAS SAVED OVER 1,000 LIVES.

Ship Captain Who Holds the Record of the Sea as a Life-Saver.

Captain Thomas L. Weiss, of the good ship Belgian King, of the California and Oriental Line, holds the record as the sea captain who has saved the greatest number of lives. The veteran sailor is said to have saved the lives of over 1,000 men, women and children during his 24 years' career on the North Atlantic. His luck in finding helpless vessels has won for him the name of the "towboat captain." The Captain has earned for the crews and owners of the steamers which he commanded the sum of $90,250, paid as derelict awards and in other ways.

It was in March, 1881, that Captain Weiss was instrumental in saving the lives of 850 souls, passengers aboard the Cunard steamer Palmyra. Coming up to the disabled steamship at a point 550 miles east of St. Johns, Newfoundland, he sent a line to the ship and towed her into St. Johns. For this the crew and owners of the Brooklyn City, the Captain's steamship, received $15,000. All sorts of thrilling stories are told of the perils the crew of the Captain's ship incurred in their efforts to save other imperiled sailors. Among the vessels towed into port by the Captain have been the steamship Albano, for Baltimore, disabled for 12 days 500 miles off the English coat, with 300 men on board and rudder gone, and the steamship Strathleven, three feet of water in her bottom, and 40 souls aboard. The captain, wife and 12 men of the German bark Margaretha Blanca, adrift 350 miles off Halifax, 14 men in the Norwegian bark Corilun, 8 in the Norwegian bark Emil, 12 in the French bark Louis, and 2 French fishermen are also among the lives saved by the captain and his men.

ISLAND OF MAN-EATERS.

Unconquered Formosa Inhabited by a Race of Savage Cannibals.

News from Formosa that Stoepel, the daring explorer, has succeeded in climbing Mount Morrison, the highest peak in the island, gives but a faint idea of the dangers which he must have encountered. Known for centuries as the garden spot of the East, Formosa is inhabited by a race of savage cannibals which have been able to prevent more than a temporary settlement on the island by white men. The Dutch, the Spanish, and the Portuguese have at different times tried to conquer the island, but have always given it up as a bad job. During the early part of this century Formosa was known as "the graveyard of mariners," because once a sailor set foot on its inviting shores he was never seen again. In 1867 an American bark, the Rover, was wrecked on the island, and the crew was massacred by the natives according to their usual custom. The Asiatic squadron of the United States was sent to enforce satisfaction, and several landing parties were sent on shore. They met with a warm reception, however, and finally it was decided to try peaceful means. Seven officers took their lives in their hands and went ashore unarmed. After a conference with the natives a treaty was made, and since that time European sailors have not been molested. Formosa supplies the world with camphor.

Dog's Death Saves a Church.

A little church in a rural district of Pennsylvania has been saved from dissolution by the happy demise of a dog. The parish was once a large and prosperous one, but the congregation dwindled and debts gathered until some five years ago the place was closed on account of back pay to the rector. The main support of the church was an old lady, whose family had attended it for more than 100 years—it lies in one of the old aristocratic sections of Virginia—and all of whose small property it was supposed, would go toward its maintenance. But on her death a great surprise was sprung. The little old lady had loved her church and parish much, but a small poodle dog had claimed her affection more. She left her entire fortune to keep this pet so long as he should live, the money going to the church upon his death, which long-looked-for event occurred recently. The debts can now be paid and the dusty pews reopened. There is hardly another case on record of one small dog being the main donator to the support of a house of worship.

The Swiss Army.

Apart from the miniature states of Monaco, Moresnet and San Marino, which can only boast of a few soldiers apiece, kept more for ornament than use, the army of Switzerland costs less to maintain than any other European army. That country—though expending about $500,000 yearly on its army—can, if necessary, put 100,000 trained soldiers into the field in two days, besides having a reserve of 100,000 more, and a militia numbering 270,000 men. Target-shooting societies are encouraged by the Swiss Government, with the result that almost every man in that country is a marksman. The soldiers serve ten years between the ages of twenty-two and thirty-two, being called out for drill on forty-five days in the first year and sixteen days in each subsequent year. Each man keeps his uniform, rifle and knapsack at home, and is responsible for their being kept in good order, a strict inspection being held.

Long Limit Cheap Excursion to Niagara Falls.

The Nickel Plate Road will run their usual Annual Excursion this year in August to Niagara Falls, but the return portion of the excursion ticket will be good on any one of their Trio of Fast Express Trains for fifteen days. Lookout for a rouser. The reputation earned for these Annual Niagara Falls Excursions over the Nickel Plate Road has made them very popular and for years it has been the rule for parties anticipating an outing during the summer to make it convenient to take in the Annual Niagara Falls Excursion on the Nickel Plate Road. This year the date is fixed for August 14th or 15th. Look for particulars later.

John Milton.

Of John Milton's ten London residences it is said not one is now left, though two or three have been standing within memory. It is proposed to turn the little churchyard of St. Giles' Church, Cripplegate, into a public garden, and to place therein a statue of the poet, whose bones lie in the chancel of the church.

Does Your Head Ache?

Are your nerves weak? Can't you sleep well? Pain in your back? Lack energy? Appetite poor? Digestion bad? Boils or pimples? These are sure signs of poisoning.

From what poisons?

From poisons that are always found in constipated bowels.

If the contents of the bowels are not removed from the body each day, as nature intended, these poisonous substances are sure to be absorbed into the blood, always causing suffering and frequently causing severe disease.

There is a common sense cure.

AYER'S PILLS

They daily insure an easy and natural movement of the bowels.

You will find that the use of

with the pills will hasten recovery. It cleanses the blood from all impurities and is a great tonic to the nerves.

Small Smoke-House.

The great difference between the price of home-grown pork and store bacon makes it a paying job for a farmer to smoke his own meat, at least for home consumption. A smoke-house is a fine thing on any farm, but like many fine things, is something of a luxury. There are many farmers who cannot afford a well arranged smoke-house. For the benefit of these we give below the sketch and description of a smoke-box which will supply the farmer's table with bacon at no expense and little trouble.

It is made of a box about 5x3 feet and 4 feet high. It is without bottom. The door for putting in and tending the meat is put in the side of the box next the top. This is about a foot wide, with hinges on the lower side. Staples are driven in the ends of the door (A, Fig. 4) with hooks (B) to slip into the staples and hold the door in place when closed. For hanging the meat, bore holes through the top of the box, far enough apart so that the pieces will not touch when hung. To hang the meat, take stout cord or pliable wire, fasten one end into the meat and run the other through the auger holes after forming a loop of it. Run a stick through the loop and your ham is secure.

A fire put in the box would make it too warm for the contents. To guard against this, the fire that furnishes the smoke is some distance from the box, being conducted to it through a covered trench or several joints of old stove-pipe. For the fireplace, dig a hole a foot or so in depth, a short distance from the box—6 feet is far enough—and connect it with the box by a trench about half as deep as the hole. If a couple or three joints of old stovepipe are at hand, place them in the trench with the upper end coming out under the box near the center. An old elbow joint makes this an easy thing to do. The other end of the pipe is to enter the hole. Then cover the pipe over with the loose dirt thrown out. Also bank up the smoke-box and calk all cracks possible. There will be enough smoke escape at best to insure the required draught.

When ready for the fire, start one in an old kettle or pan. Cobs make the best material, being easy to handle and keep well. When a good smoke is going, set it in the hole prepared for it, and cover over with boards, or better, a large piece of sheet-iron, tin or something of the kind. Bank this up so as to keep the smoke from escaping, and you are in a fair way to soon have some first-class bacon. The box will smoke from two to three hundred pounds at a time. It is inexpensive, easy to construct, and what is most essential, a success.—Ohio Farmer.

Clay Soil for Pears.

It is universally agreed that a heavy clay soil is best for the pear. There are various reasons for this, the principal one being that clay soil is always rich in mineral fertilizers, while a sandy or gravelly soil is deficient in this kind of plant food. But the clay soil, though rich in phosphates and potash, may not have them in available form, and may need a dressing in spring of these minerals in available form. Trees on clay may need dressings of available potash and phosphate in the years when the tree is bearing. On sandy soil the pear tree always needs these manures. The pear roots deeply, so that it is never affected by droughts, and in clay soils it doubtless draws mineral fertilizers from the subsoil below where the roots of grain and other crops usually grow. It is a great mistake to allow the tap root of a pear tree to be cut off before it is transplanted.

Sunflowers as Bean Poles.

The selecting and cutting of poles for the vines of the bean to grow on is no easy task, even where timber is plentiful, and in a prairie country it is a problem. I have found a substitute for the pole in the old-fashioned sunflower, one stalk for each hill. They are ornamental, the seed is good for the poultry, and the stalks make fine kindling wood. Some may claim that the sunflower will take the strength of the ground from the beans, but my experience does not agree with this. The finest beans I ever raised were grown with sunflowers for poles.—J. L. Irwin.

Thinning Early Apples.

Wherever the codling moth is abundant that will attend to the thinning of the early apples, which begin to ripen even while the moth is at work in its first brood. Very few early apples escape the worm, and many fall before they are fit for any use. But one or two entire failures of the apple crop have so reduced the codling moth that we think it will pay to go through trees of early apples and take out one-quarter to one-third, according to how plentifully the fruit has set. So soon as the fruit begins to turn a further thinning may be made with profit.

Tree Roots in Underdrains.

It is never safe to leave a large tree growing near where an underdrain has been laid, unless the tile are jointed, that is, made like the city sewer pipe, so that one end is smaller, and slides into the next, making a tightly fitting joint. As tile are usually laid it is impossible to prevent there being a crack wide enough to admit the fibrous roots of a tree, which go everywhere in search of moisture. In the tile the tree root expands until the tile is entirely filled, and the drain is ruined. Almost any large tree will do this, but the worst of all trees are the willow, elm and locust. All of these love water, and none of them should be allowed to grow near underdrains or wells. In some parts of the country willows and locusts are planted in dooryards. But if near a well, even if the well be roofed over, their roots will find their way to the water, and spoil it for use.

How to Irrigate Crops.

One of the best short cuts in watering all crops planted in rows is the use of small tubes or boxes made of lath. They are made by sawing common plastering lath in three pieces, sixteen inches long, then rip one piece in the center and nail together with two or three penny nails, so the tubes will be square, the width of a lath, about 1½ inches on the outside, and a little less than three-quarters of an inch on the inside. This will also allow a stream of water sufficiently large for ordinary soils. These tubes should be placed one at the upper end of each irrigation furrow, connecting it with the feed ditch. Have the feed ditch as near level as possible. If the feed ditch has too much fall the wash will fill up the ends of the tubes. It can be remedied by placing checks or sluice boxes at proper intervals with gates sufficiently high to back the water up far enough to make the water stand nearly still. Occasional cleaning of the tubes with a small switch is all that is necessary. With this arrangement all that is required to irrigate a field is to turn the water into the feed ditch and let it run until the ground is thoroughly soaked, which is a saving of a great deal of time and attention.—F. S. Calkins, in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Keep Young Hogs Growing.

There is an impression among farmers that hogs in summer at pasture can get enough with the swill from the house and what they can get in the fields. This was all right so long as skim-milk, one of the best foods for growth, was part of the swill, and uneaten refuse from the table was also thrown in. But in many places the skimmed milk is now sold in some form, while a better use for table refuse is found in giving it to the poultry. So the pig is starved in summer, which is the time he ought to grow the fastest, and is the poorest preparation for the heavy corn feeding that will begin in September and continue until the pig is turned over to the butcher. A half-starved animal loses the power of digesting hearty food, for the stomach, like every other organ of the body, needs to have something to do to keep in good health and strength.

Artificial Fertilization.

A scientific investigation demonstrated that the failure of some of the California fig orchards to bear fruits was due to the failure of the pollen to reach the female flower. Artificial fertilization was attempted and pollen was introduced into the flowers by a blowpipe at the proper period of growth. The trees so treated produced excellent fruit. Agents of the California fig-growers who were sent to Smyrna to study the methods used in that country, where the best and largest supply of figs come from, found that the trees were fertilized by a curious bee, which carried the pollen from flower to flower. The Smyrna fig-growers would not sell any of these bees. The California agents obtained some secretly, however, but they died before reaching Los Angeles.

Killing a Weed.

It does not pay to make any false motions in hoeing, especially if killing weeds is the object. Above all, do not either cut off the leaves of a weed or allow others to do so before uprooting it if you want to kill it. We had a hired man once who persisted in spite of all we could tell him in striking twice with his hoe to destroy a weed. With his first blow he struck the weed, just at the surface of the ground, cutting off all the top. Then he struck deeper and turned up the root. Invariably if a rain or cloudy weather came that weed grew. It was simply transplanted under the best conditions for growing, much root and little top. We let the man go after a few days' trial to reform him, but without effect. He was too stupid to know how to handle a hoe.—American Cultivator.

No Grass for Working Horses.

It seems almost cruel not to give horses a feed of grass occasionally, even when they are hard working at this season, when grass and clover are at their prime. Yet every farmer knows that if allowed to run to grass, even for a few hours, the working horse will lose his appetite for the solid food that gives him strength, and be incapable for several days thereafter of doing a full day's work. Horses are exceedingly fond of grass and clover. Sometimes, if old hay is scarce, the farmer tries to economize by cutting some clover, and after drying it nearly into hay feeding it in place of the hay. But even this has to be given very carefully or it will work injury.

Advice is seldom welcome. Those who need it most, like it least.—Johnson.

How to Clean Silver.

Instead of rubbing with prepared chalk for hours, the silver service may be cleaned in a few minutes quite as effectively. After each meal the silver should be put in a small dishpan, kept for the purpose, and covered with lukewarm water, to which a tablespoonful of powdered borax has been added, then taken out immediately and rubbed on a soft cloth, and each piece rubbed with a piece of chamois skin. The borax removes the tarnish quickly. Some prefer leaving the water as hot as your hands can bear it, and rub the silver quickly while the water is hot, and put away out of the light. Newspapers are excellent for shining up silver, even better than the chamois skin.—Economist.

Baked Ham.

To bake ham, first soak it whole in water over night. Then rinse, scrape and place it in water over the fire. Having allowed it to boil gently two hours, remove it from the water and take off the skin. This done, place the ham in a large dripping pan and bake it in a very moderate oven for three hours, basting it frequently. Use for the basting a generous cupful of vinegar in which a tablespoonful of brown sugar has been dissolved. Pour this over the ham in quantities of a few teaspoonfuls at a time, and when it is all consumed, baste with the drippings from the pan. Hams cooked in this way are always tender and of most excellent flavor.

Care of the Stove.

If a little kerosene is used to mix with the blacking used to polish stoves before putting them away for the summer, it will prevent rust. The isinglass should also be wiped clean with vinegar, then polished, the stove pipes carefully emptied, brushed free from all soot and the joints numbered, so that in putting them together again in the fall there need be no cause for profanity from the one appointed to "set up the stove." The stove shaker and poker should also be wrapped in paper and laid inside the stove, and then newspapers laid over the stove to protect it from dust.

Fish Balls.

Ingredients, boiled potatoes; freshened, slowly boiled, "salt, dry fish;" pork gravy in sufficient proportions for hash. Peel potatoes while hot, mash and mix with the finely shredded fish and moisten with the pork, which has been cut into fine bits and tried out slowly, crisping the slices. Season to taste, adding a boiled, chopped onion if that flavoring is liked. Mold into balls and let it stand till next day, when brown in moderate oven. Half a cup rich, sweet cream is an improvement, mixed when mashing the potatoes.

To Can Tomatoes.

When the tomatoes are ready to fill into jars, throw in as much salt as would be necessary to season fresh tomatoes for the table; if you wish to eat them with sugar, the salt improves them. Glass jars should be kept in a dark place; if you have no cellar a dark closet will do equally well. To prevent freezing put a heavy comfort over jars; when very cold put some live coals in an iron vessel and set in closet, placing a rock under to prevent burning floor.

Chicken Pie.

Season with salt and boil your chicken until it is tender. Butter a pan and line the sides with good light biscuit dough; put in a layer of chicken; cut dough in 2-inch squares and put in a layer of pepper and bits of butter, again a layer of chicken, then dough, butter and pepper and so on. Pour in the broth and put on strips, leaving room for the gravy to bubble through. Bake a rich brown, and just before you take out of the stove, stir half spoonful of flour in a cup of cream and pour in.

To Clean White Veils.

White veils may be nicely cleaned by soaking for half an hour in a solution of ivory or castile soap. Then press between the hands until clean. Rinse in clear water. Make a cupful of very weak starch or gumarabic water, soak the veil in it a few moments, then clap in the hands until nearly dry. Spread a towel over a pillow and pin the lace in each point smoothly over it, letting it remain until perfectly dry.

SAVED BY A COBRA.

Deadly Snake Was the Means of Salvation to a British Officer.

An unusual kind of snake story is printed by the New York Sun on the authority of John Bain, "who served in the British cavalry in India."

I knew a case in which a cobra saved a British officer's life—not intending in the least to do so, of course. The officer had gone with a detachment to a district in Northern India to bring to order one of the hill tribes that had been making trouble and had killed a civil officer or two. His quarters were at the bungalow of the magistrate of the district.

He had got things quieted down among the tribesmen, and everything safe, to all appearances, and was preparing to take life easy, when one night, sleeping at the bungalow, he heard a cobra moving about in his chamber.

A cobra looking about for prey, or when ready to fight, rears its head and about one-third of its body straight upward from the ground, and as the bed on which the officer lay was a low one he knew that if the cobra came to it he was very likely to get bitten. At any movement he made the cobra would hiss, showing that it was in an unpleasant temper; and to make things worse, the officer's night lamp had gone out, so that he could judge of the snake's position only by sound.

He stood the strain as long as he could, and then made up his mind that he would at any rate get to a place where the snake could not reach him. A tall dressing-case stood against the wall, about six feet from the head of the bed. The officer reached out to a chair, set it half-way between the bed and the dressing-case, and then stepped from the bed to the chair, and from the chair to the top of the dressing-case. There he was safe from the cobra.

As he perched on the dressing-case in the dark, thinking how ridiculous and uncomfortable his position was, two hillmen stole in at the door, rushed to the bedside and struck fiercely with their tulwars the heap of bedclothing under which the officer had lain, before they discovered that he was not there.

The snake set up a loud hissing, which seemed to convince the assassins that the officer could not be in the room, and they went away without seeing him, passing the dressing-case not a step away.

The cobra presently crawled out of the room through the door they had left open, and the officer was able to get down from the dressing-case and raise an alarm. The two hillmen he never caught, but he slept with a sentinel at his door during the rest of his stay in the district.

Wellington and the Blankets.

What you say about the difficulty of preventing peculation in the army reminds me of an anecdote I have heard my mother tell of the Duke of Wellington. A friend of my mother had a contract to supply blankets for the army. When they were delivered the Duke desired that every blanket should be unrolled and shown to him. When the gentleman, who was as proud of his honor as a manufacturer as any soldier could be of his honor, remonstrated against what seemed an aspersion on his integrity, the Duke only said: "It is my duty to see that the soldiers have proper blankets." I do not know the time or the circumstances, beyond the bare fact as I have heard my mother relate it.

Perhaps you will allow me to tell another story I have heard from my mother of the great Duke. He was staying in some town—it may have been Cheltenham—where was a girl who longed intensely to see him. She was ill and could not leave her bedroom. Some one told the Duke of her wish, and he came and walked for some time in front of her window, that she might see him.—London Spectator.

Credited with a Smart Saying.

Hearing of the grace and agility of a pretty Scotch lassie who danced the sword dance, Queen Victoria sent for her to dance before royalty and was greatly entertained. At the close of the brilliant performance the girl advanced and courtesied profoundly. "What can I do for you?" asked her Majesty. "Give me the head of Gladstone!" said the modern Herodias. "I would gladly do that, my dear, but he lost it some years ago," retorted the Queen.

THE ills of women conspire against domestic harmony. Some derangement of the generative organs is the main cause of most of the unhappiness in the household.

The husband can't understand these troubles. The male physician only knows of them theoretically and scientifically, and finds it hard to cure them.

Among the multitude of women helped by Mrs. Pinkham and by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, is MRS. JOSEPH KING, Sabina, Ohio. She writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—Will you kindly allow me the pleasure of expressing my gratitude for the wonderful relief I have experienced by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered for a long time with falling of the womb, and those terrible bearing-down pains, and it seemed as though my back would never stop aching; also had leucorrhœa, dull headaches, could not sleep, was weak and life was a burden to me. I doctored for several years, but it did no good. My husband wanted me to try your medicine, and I am so thankful that I did. I have taken four bottles of the Compound and a box of Liver Pills, and can state that if more ladies would only give your medicine a fair trial they would bless the day they saw your advertisement. A Cruel Injustice

Both the Waterloo Press and the Butler Evening Journal have the following untruthful and very unjust article.

"It is secretly whispered that in the appointment of the county council, influences were at work back of it all to secure men who will cut off all cost of repairs on the county buildings and recommend the building of a new court house, If the tax payers of the county don't want this large expense it would be well for them to 'hang onto the necks' of their county council."

We cannot say which paper got up this article as neither gives credit to the other. But that point is a matter of the smallest importance. One would think Judge Hartman had had a hard enough time, and enough worry——all gratuitous—— over the appointment of about 100 offices for his two counties, without being dealt such such a stab as this. Passing by the heartlessness of it, the fact is, that Mr. Hartman would not do such a thing as an official act, no matter whether he desired a new court house or not. But neither he nor anyone else, as far as we have heard has offered an opinion as to a new court house, and surely no one thinks of building one till we have to do so, at least no one in Auburn. But this is the second time at least, that the matter has been egged on by papers outside of Auburn. Judge Hartman has had but one aim in selecting the men for county council and for the township boards, and that is, to get the men, who in his judgment will best perform the duties assigned to him by the new law. This has been a difficult task, not for the lack of good men, but in choosing among several, the one he thought best fitted, As for the "cost of repairs etc," all the repairs needed, have been already provided for by the commissioners, bids are advertised for and the job will soon be let and the work done. So the new council can have nothing to do with the matter. If anyone wanted any more repairs made, we have not heard of it. Perhaps these editors could suggest something else that needs repairing.

Will Marry a Baron

Here is a marriage in high life, in which Auburn people are interested.

Today noon, Mrs. T, J, Hayden started for the East over the Lake Shore road, and will stop a short time at Cleveland and other points to visit friends. From that place, she goes to Warren, Pa., where her brother-in-law F. A. Chadwick resides. There on Wednesday of next week, June 14, Mr. Chadwick's only daughter, Miss Julia Maude Chadwick is to be united in marriage to Baron Karl Christian Kurfze. Miss Chadwick is a young lady of marked talent and highly educated, being especially gifted in elocution, and music. The Baron is a member of a prominent and highly respected branch of the German nobility. The young couple enter on their new relations with the brightest prospects. We have not learned whether they will reside in this country permanently or not, but they will remain here for a time.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement, that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Disrovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from the first dose. She continued its use and after taking six bottles, found herself sound and well; now does her own housework, and is as well as she ever was.—Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at H. B. McCord's Drug Store. Only 50 cents and $1.00, every bottle guaranteed

Jacob Walborn Dead

As stated nearly every day for a week or so, Mr. Walborn has been lying at the point of death for that time. The fears of his friends were only too well-founded, as he breathed his last at about two o'clock this morning. He was a most estimable citizen and his loss, in many ways, is almost irreparable. This was especially so in church circles, in which he has always been active and liberal. We believe that in his will, he leaves his church, St. Marks Lutheran. $1000. He was over 67, but a full obituary will be given later.

Had Kidney Disease 27 years

Mr. G. A. Stillman, a merchadt of Tampico, Ill., writes. "Foley's Kidney Cure is meeting with wonderful success. It has cured some cases here that physicians pronounced incurable. I myself am able to testify to its merits. My face today is a living picture of health, and Foley's Kidney Cure has made it such. I had suffered twenty-seven years with the disease, and today I feel ten years younger than I did one year ago. I can obtain some wonderful certificates of its medical qualities.

—Quite a number of people are over from Newville to remonstrate against licensing a saloon in that place. Among other objections they make, is the way the applicant advertised. They say he had his notice put into the Butler Herald and sandwiched in with the railway time cards. This alone should be enough to condemn a man as unfit, for if he will deceive the people by such a small trick he is not likely to live up to the law in his business if he can cover up his tracks.

MEET IN ANNUAL REUNION.

DeKalb County's Old Settlers Enjoy a Day of Rest and Recreation.

The weather clerk has been exceedingly kind to DeKalb county's old settlers today and furnished a style of weather—neither too hot nor too cold—that just suited everybody; and the weather was a big factor in bringing out a large crowd of the pioneers who have had so much to do with the growth and development of one of the best counties in the old Hoosier commonwealth. Those who were neighbors in the years gone by, many who are nearing the end of life's journey after many years of toil and care, not however unmingled with happiness, were again permitted to renew old acquaintances and exchange reminiscences, while there were many more of younger generations to whom the meeting was none the less pleasant. Quite a number who were at the meeting in 1898 have since passed beyond life's borders, and of these there was naught but kindly mention, as befitted their long and useful lives.

The exercises of the forenoon were brief, but interesting. The meeting was called to order by Hon. Freeman Kelley and the program included excellent singing by a choir of twelve voices, prayer by Rev. T. M. Guild, and the reading of the reports of the secretary and other officers. The meeting then adjourned for dinner.

The afternoon session opened shortly after 1 o'clock with a well rendered medley of popular airs by the Auburn band and shortly afterward a large crowd had gathered in the vicinity of the stand in court park where the exercises were held. It was a good natured crowd, too, and old and young seemed to vie with each other in making the affair a complete success in every way. The program for the afternoon was interesting throughout, including plenty of good music by the band, singing by the choir, a recitation by Miss Olive Elson and other numbers, the principal feature being the annual address by Gen. L. J. Blair of Waterloo one of the earliest settlers of the county and a regular attendant at the annual meetings of the association, which was listened to with much attention by the large audience and heartily applauded at its close. We regret that a lack of space and time of going to press prevents a more extended notice of the different numbers on the program.

The registration of those who have been residents of DeKalb county for more than fifty years was larger than last year, when 316 names were recorded upon the roll of those in attendance. In point of long residence L. J. Blair and William Knight were the leaders, their settlement here dating from 1835; those next to them were Messrs. Jonathan Boyle and Wm. Henderson who came here in 1836. Quite a number were registered who have resided in the county more than half a century, and A. J. Ralston enjoyed the distinction of being the oldest continuous resident of Auburn—52 years.

Taken all in all it was one of the most enjoyable reunions ever held by the old settlers and we hope all may live to meet again next year.

A Narrow Escape.

Thankful words written by Mrs. Ada E. Hart, of Groton, S. D. "Was taken with a bad cold which settled on my lungs; cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up, saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Savior, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs, and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles. It has cured me, and I thank God, I am saved and now a well and healthy woman." Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's Drug Store. Regular size 50 and $1.00. Guaranteed or price refunded.

Will Bear Watching.

(Indianapolis Journal.)

If reports are true, some dealers in this city who make a business of "working" township trustees for blanks have been making hay while the sun shines. Under the new law when the township boards are in operation useless extavagant expenditures of this kind will be stopped, and only such blanks will be purchased as the law requires. It seems, however, that some dealers whose business is to bleed the people through these officials and to educate township trustees in extravagant practices have been getting them to lay in large stocks of blanks which the new law does not require them to purchase. If not too late the new advisory boards should hold up the bills for these improper purchases. It is time that the practice of "working" county and township officers, milking the entire state for the benefit of a few dealers in this city, should be stopped.

Preacher and Pugilist.

[Toledo Bee.]

We don't know what kind of religion they have on tap in California, but it appears to be very erratic if we may judge from the public reports of what word Clergyman Jeffries sent by wire to his son, who had just licked Fitzsimmons in the prize ring.

While it appears that before the battle Preacher Jeffries was not altogether satisfied with the method of earning a living selected by his pugilistic son, still it seems that the boy's victory was too much for the weak human nature of his clerical papa. For when the news of Jeffries' victory over the wires from New York to California, the pious father loosened up his paternal heartstrings and said to the reporter:

"It is just as I said some time ago when I was asked for an expression as to the coming battle. The Lord was in the fight. He was with Jim and of course Jim won."

That thought may console Preacher Jeffries, but we shouldn't be surprised to hear that other preachers whose sons are not in the prize-fighting business object to mixing the Lord up in the Jeffries-Fitzsimmon mill.

And herein lies the danger. Among the many pugilists the new champion may be called upon to meet in the ring is Homer Selby, otherwise known as Kid McCoy. His father, too, is a preacher, and an Indiana preacher at that. From all we know both preachers are good preachers, and the question arises, can Providence be expected to take sides if Jeffries and McCoy come together.

Jake Helms Lodged in the Fort Wayne Jail

The doubts and rumors regarding the disposal of Jake Helms by Sheriff Hathaway Tuesday night have been dispelled by the authorative announcement in this morning's Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette that the prisoner is now in the Allen county jail where all precautions will be taken to protect him from mob violence. When Sheriff Hathaway left Auburn with Helms he drove by a roundabout way to Albion, arriving there at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, and placed the man in the hands of Sheriff Bell. The suspicious actions of several strangers at Albion yesterday led Mr. Bell to believe that spies were at work, and, fearing that the mob might come to Albion, he decided to follow the plan previously arranged and take Helms to Fort Wayne. Not daring to trust taking a railroad route Sheriff Bell, accompanied by his prisoner, drove to Columbia City where they boarded a train on the Pennsylvania road, arriving in Fort Wayne without molestion. There is no doubt that this move was expected as Sheriff Melching stated last night that there were men in Fort Wayne yesterday on the look out for Helms. Extra precautions have been taken to protect Helms while he remains at Fort Wayne, and with plenty of assistance at hand Sheriff Melching says he can keep at bay any mob that may conclude to make any attempt to secure his prisoner. The Journal-Gazette says:

"When Helms was brought to the local jail he was put in a cell on the second floor where he could not be secured without the greatest effort of a mob. He was dressed in a dark suit of clothes, his face has about a week's growth of beard upon it and his hair and heavy sandy mustache were unkempt. He wore a dirty shirt, but made excuses for it by saying that he wanted to go home and put on a clean one before leaving Garrett, but that Sheriff Hathaway would not allow him to do so. Helms evidently does not realize the seriousness of the charge placed against him, or he is trying to play a clever dodge. In talking of the case last night he laughed and joked about it and the only time he showed any anxiety was when he asked how long they could keep him before he could be given a preliminary hearing.

He denied the charge made against him. He said it was through the spite work of a woman in Garrett with whom he used to keep company, that the charge was put against him. He says the only thing he did to the Smith children was to put them out of his house and slam the door on them. He was arrested for assault and battery and the charge was later placed against him for attempted rape. He claims that the Smith child that is expected to die has been under the care of a physician for some time and was in poor health."

The Muncie Meeting

The pilgrims that went to Muncie are home and agree that they had a fine time and were spendidly treated by the people of the "Queen of the Gas Belt." The Northern Indiana Editorial Association is about 40 years old, one of the oldest in the country, had been invited to meet there and though the attendance was smaller than usual, those who came will not regret it. The papers read were practical and valuable and the renewal of old acquaintances most pleasant. Muncie is the largest and probably wealthiest town in the gas belt; its growth since its cheap fuel has come into use, having been steady and safe. Her people are evidently wide awake and public spirited, and above all things enterprising as evidences are plainly seen on all hands. They received the newspaper people as if they had been old friends, and during our stay made them feel that this welcome came from the heart. Of course they showed us over the town and through their great factories. To see these things was a part of our errand there, and what we saw will be given in a separate article. It would be too long for this. So early next week we shall give our readers some valuable bits of information on the wonders of manufacturing plants in the Gas Belt, for there are wonderful things done, of which we know little or nothing.

The sessions of the meeting, were to the reading of papers and addresses Thursday afternoon, and the evening reception at the Country Club. The visits to factories etc. Friday forenoon: the papers and discussions, that afternoon. New officers were elected. They are F. D. Haimbaugh of the Muncie Herald, for president; vice-president, 1st Mr. Welch of the Elkhart Review; 2nd C. W. Metzger, Plymouth Independent; 3d Mrs. J. E. Sutton of the Logansport Reporter; Secy. J. S. Conlogue, Kendallville Sun; Treas. C. H. Bundy, Marion News.

Delegates to the National meeting at Portland, Oregon: A. E Sutton, Logansport Reporter; H. E. Henderson Kokomo Dispatch; E. E. Goldthwaite of the Marion Chronicle; Ben. Moffitt of the Plymouth Independent; James A. Barns, Auburn COURIER; Geo. Fowler of the Frankfort Times.

COURT NEWS

Thursday's Daily.

The struck jury in the case of Jackson Clem vs the Fort Wayne consolidated street railway company was impaneled this forenoon and then dismissed until tomorrow morning when the case will be taken up for trial. It is an important case and the trial will probably last several days.

The case of Mrs. Reidtdorf against the Fort Wayne consolidated street railway company went to the jury about 6 o'clock last evening after a trial lasting several days. The jury came in this afternoon ready to report but were sent out again to answer several interrogatories. About 2:30 a verdict was returned awarding the plaintiff $500 damages; she sued for $10,000.

The will of the late George W. Row, bequeathing a considerable estate consisting of some valuable real and personal property, was probated today. By terms of the will the entire estate is left to the widow during life and at her death to be divided equally among the decedent's two daughters and two sons.

On account of the old settler's reunion but little business was transacted in court today.

Saturday's Daily.

The court was at work yesterday and today on the second struck jury case from Allen county. The jurors are:

H. C. Rohm, John Hamilton, Wm. E. Crane, W. S. Maxwell, Florence Buchanan Will Potter, Harry Caldwell, Jas. D. Myers, S. H. Myers S. H. Barton, Newcomer, John C. Clark, H. L. Fulk.

The case is: this Jackson Clem, a blacksmith living at Baldwin near Fort Wayne was driving into town with his team and two or three men were riding with him. As he entered Fort Wayne, the team was scared at a trolley car and ran. Clem was thrown to the pavement and picked up unconscious with a broken arm and other injuries. He asks damages against the trolley line. He claims it was worth $60 for loss of time and $250 for surgeons to get him right. The arguments were made today, and now the jury has it.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Extensive Long Distance Telephone Connections Now Being Arranged.

(From Electricity)

The Indianapolis Journal states that "the New telephone company has completed arrangements for a western wire as far as St. Louis and ultimately Kansas City. H. J. Hanford, general manager of the Kinloch telephone company of St. Louis, has entered into a contract with the Indiana company whereby the latter will build a line to Terre Haute and the St. Louis company will extend its line east to that city. The arrangement has been under contemplation for some time, but owing to the fact that there have been two independent plants in Terre Haute it has not been consummated. The prospects for the two Terre Haute companies uniting are now very bright, but even if they do not the line will be built by the St. Louis and the New companies. The New company has a contract with the Ohio independent companies by which it will meet the wires at three points and the Ohio companies have a like contract with the Pennsylvania companies. The St. Louis company is extending its lines through Missouri and they will soon reach Kansas City."

After these extensions are completed all the above named great areas will be added to the field of the Home telephone company of Auburn and be available for the use of its patrons.

Cured When Others Failed

S. A. Ingalls, Crown Point, N. Y. writes: My wife suffered from Kidney trouble for years. She consulted several physicians and tried a number of Kidney Cures without getting relief. She was induced to try Foley's Kidney Cure and in less than a week after she began using it, she was greatly improved and three bottles cured her.

Still Pleads Innocence

A Fort Wayne Sentinel reporter interviewed Jake Helms at the Allen county jail yesterday and found him apparently unconcerned though it could be easily seen that he had lost much sleep. When asked regarding the charge made against him Helms asserted his innocence and declared that if released he would be willing to return to Garrett. In answer to the question of how two little girls could trump up such a charge he said:

"I do not know that they did, and believe somebody else told them to. I heard rumors of the charges some time before I was arrested, but paid no attention to them because they are not true. I know the Smith girls, one of whom is seven and the other nine. The family resides next to my house, and the Smith children often played with my children in our yard. I do not know them apart, but often ordered them to leave the yard because they would pick flowers that I had to place on my wife's grave. I knew them only as the Smith children, and never had anything to do with them further than to order them away. The father is employed in the shops. After my wife's death I hired a girl aged about sixteen to keep house for me and she stayed thirteen months and four days, when I decided to have an older woman to care for the children. The second woman I engaged was divorced, but some time ago she made up with her husband and since that time I paid a family 50 cents a day to take care of the children. I took them home nights. On June 3, the day on which I understand I am charged with assaulting the Smith girl who makes the affidavit, I worked during the forenoon and afternoon, in company with three friends, rode to Auburn on bicycles. In the evening when I returned I was very tired and soaked with sweat and went to bed before it was cleverly dark."

There have been no new developments in the case and no definite arrangements have been made to give Helms a trial.

NEWS IN BRIEF GUSTS

BLOWN IN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE EARTH.

An Important Record of the Week As Told by the Telegraph—Latest from Foreign Shores—Crimes, Casualties, Fires, Etc.

Opposing the Pardon of Marvin Kuhns.

A special from Ligonier, Ind., says: Petitions are now being circulated in Noble and adjoining counties for the pardon of Marvin Kuhns, the notorious desperado, now confined in prison in Columbus, Ohio, on a life sentence for murder. Kuhns and and a gang of robbers held sway in this section for years, causing a reign of terror. In the summer of 1895 he held at bay a posse of Noble County citizens for two weeks, in the swamps of Green Township He was finally shot and desperately wounded by Fort Wayne officers and was placed under arrest for the murder of his accomplices during a foray in Ohio. Kuhns has professed a change of heart, but Noble County people are too fearful of his notorious past to assist in freeing him.

Congressman Bland Dead.

Congressman Richard P. Bland died at his home in Lebanon, Mo. He was born August 19, 1835, at Hartford, Ky., and went to Missouri when he was 20, where he practiced law among the miners, and there absorbed the doctrine of bi-metallism. He was elected to Congress in 1872 and served almost continuously thereafter. He was the author of the Bland-Allison bill for the full coinage of silver, and before the Chicago convention was mentioned as a candidate for the presidency, but refused to push himself forward. A distinguished Republican once said that Bland was the only Democrat since the civil war deserving the name of statesman, being "honest in view, thoroughly incorruptible and entirely above considerations of policy."

Indiana Fish Law Valid.

The Indiana fish law passed by the last Legislature is valid, at least so far as it prohibits catching fish in any of the streams of this State in the months of May and June. The Supreme Court so held in the case of Louis Gustavel against the State of Indiana. It also gave a construction to the provisions of the law. Gustavel was prosecuted for catching and killing one black bass more than nine inches in length in the Tippecanoe River, on May 6, 1889. He was found guilty and fined $5 and costs, and took an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Confesses to the Kidnapping.

New York special: Belle Anderson has turned state's evidence and on the stand will tell all about the Marion Clark kidnapping and become a state's witness. The District Attorney sent for the girl and in the presence of her lawyer, a Deputy Sheriff and Assistant District Attorney Le Barbier, she made a full confession.

Coffins Filled with Stones.

The committee of the Board of Supervisors of Quincy, Ill., investigating the burial of paupers, say they found twenty-seven bodies missing, for whose burial the county had paid. In some cases rough pine boxes filled with stone were found when the graves were opened. It is alleged the bodies were sold to medical colleges.

More Transports Chartered.

The Quartermaster's Department has rechartered the Zealandia and Valencia transports now at San Francisco, to be used to carry troops to the Philippines. These transports belonged to the Pacific coast fleet, but it was thought they would no longer be required and were put out of commission.

Two Negroes Lynched.

New Orleans special: Edward Gray, a negro who was arrested in St. John Parish about a year ago with Charles Morelle, another negro, and charged with a series of burglaries, was lynched recently. Morelle, the other negro arrested, was lynched the night before.

Another War Cloud.

The Italian Government, says the Rome correspondent of the London Daily Mail, has demanded satisfaction from France for the arbitrary arrest at Nice of the Italian General, Cilletta, who was taken into custody there on a charge of espionage.

A Town Drowned.

The town of Brackett, about 120 miles west of San Antonio, Texas, is under ten feet of water. Four persons are missing and are supposed to be drowned. A waterspout over that place inundated the country for miles around.

Another Town Wiped Out.

A tornado struck the town of Herman, in Washington County, Nebraska, and wiped the place out of existence. Herman is a place of about 300 inhabitants, in the extreme northern part of Washington county.

New York Bay Victim Identified.

The dismembered body of the victim of the New York Bay mystery has been positively identified as Edward Johnson, a sailor on the steamship Othello. He received $140 in wages and disappeared June 5 from the sailors' lodging house.

Shot at Hawk, Killed Brother.

While two brothers were out hunting near Bloomington, Ind., Henry Leech was instantly killed. The brother had shot low at a wounded hawk and the full load of shot lodged in Henry's head, killing him instantly.

Alleged Forger Gets Away.

At Hartford City, Ind., M. Redkey, cashier of the Leesburg, Ohio, Bank, captured G. W. Delph, whom he claimed had imposed a forged note on him. Unfortunately the cashier was without papers necessary to hold Delph and he made his escape by dodging down an alley.

Fire at Elizabethtown, Ind.

Fire at Elizabethtown, Ind., caused loss estimated at $40,000. The fire was discovered in Murphy's Hall, a three-story brick structure, and spread rapidly. The Odd Fellows' building, a three-story brick, caught fire, but was saved before the walls fell.

FIREWORKS PLANT WIPED OUT.

Thirty-six Buildings at Graniteville, N. Y., Are Blown Up.

The available stock of Fourth of July fireworks was greatly reduced Thursday when the immense plant of the Nordinger-Charlton Company at Graniteville, N. Y., was destroyed by an explosion. Thirty-six buildings were demolished. Although the fires which followed the explosion lasted for several hours, the wreck was complete within a few minutes. No lives were lost, and but three persons were injured, two of them seriously. The loss on the buildings will probably not amount to over $3,500, as most of the structures were small and cheaply constructed. The loss on material, raw and that made up into fireworks, will amount to over $30,000. The amount of insurance on the works is not known. The flying rockets, many of them of the greatest power, made it extremely dangerous for the employes. An explosion occurred at the manufacturing plant of the Pain's Fireworks Company at Greenfield, L. I., and resulted in the destruction of two manufacturing sheds and a small magazine. The damage is placed at about $25,000.

PRICES ARE ON A HIGH LEVEL.

Exceptional Firmness Shown—Trade Reviews by Bradstreet and Dun.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "The last week has brought a rise in prices not equaled in any other week of many years. It is needless to say that this is a symptom of danger, and the most conservative manufacturers, especially in iron and steel, have striven to avoid it, but actual inability to deliver products demanded leaves them little power, while speculation in wool and other lines is running away from consumption. It is a saving feature that quotations are quite largely fictitious. After some advance wheat suddenly declined 2 cents, closing lower for the week. Against all accounts of injury is the solid fact that Western receipts were 5,049,194 bushels for the week, against 1,477,045 from the great crop of last year. Corn has shown unusual independence, scarcely changing in price, with exports 2,804,900 bushels, against 4,134,641 last year. For the current week failures have been 159 in the United States, against 203 last year, and 10 in Canada, against 17 last year."

GLASS TABLEWARE COMBINE.

Manufacturers to Incorporate Under the Laws of Pennsylvania.

Glass tableware manufacturers of the country have finally taken decisive steps toward forming a combination. This was done at the Hotel Lincoln, Pittsburg. An application has been filed for a charter under the laws of Pennsylvania and the new venture will be pushed as fast as possible. The National Glass Company will be the name of the new organization. The temporary directors and incorporators are: H. C. Frick, D. C. Jenkins, W. D. Baird, John M. Jamison and Daniel C. Ripley. The capital stock will be $8,000,000 or $9,000,000. Among the companies in the new corporation are: United States Glass Company, Pittsburg; Rochester Tumbler Company, Rochester; Indiana Tumbler and Goblet Company, Greentown, Ind.; Tarentum Glass Company, Tarentum, Pa., and McKees Brothers, Pittsburg.

SALARIES OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Admiral Dewey Gets $13,500 Whether at Sea or on Land.

The Navy Department has issued a circular fixing the salaries of navy officers under the naval personnel bill. Admiral Dewey will receive $13,500 whether on duty at sea or on shore. The senior rear admiral's pay is fixed at $7,500 at sea and $6,375 on shore. Rear Admiral Schley is in this list, but only receives the minimum amount, as he is assigned to shore duty. The junior rear admirals receive $5,500 while on sea duty and $4,677 on shore. Rear Admiral Sampson is in the junior list, but having a command at sea receives the maximum pay. Should Schley be given an assignment at sea he would receive $2,000 more a year than Sampson, but as it now is his pay amounts to but $875 more. Captains receive $8,500 at sea and $2,975 on shore.

SHOOTS WIFE AND DAUGHTER.

South Dakotan Flees Prepared to Fight with His Pursuers.

S. Clark shot and fatally wounded his wife and 15-year-old daughter four miles northwest of Delmont, S. D., and then disappeared. Officers went in pursuit, but Clark had a good start. Clark and his wife were once divorced, but were remarried a year ago. They again disagreed and separated, the wife suing for a divorce. She was visiting at a former neighbor's house when the daughter, who had remained with the father, went to visit her. Clark followed and shot them both, the wife in the neck and the girl through the shoulder and again through the head.

Colorado Capitalists Invest $2,500,000 in New Properties.

The St. Anthony Crystal Mica Company, composed of the bonanza king, W. S. Stratton, W. H. Colburn and other Colorado Springs capitalists, has just bought six mines for $2,500,000. When the company was incorporated, two months ago, its mica properties, which are scattered throughout New Mexico, were worth $1,000,000. The principal field is 100 miles below Santa Fe, within twenty miles of the Denver and Rio Grande Railway, connecting with which a branch will be built.

Wheat Crops Will Be Fair.

The Mark Lane Express, in its weekly crop report, says Belgium, Holland, Italy and parts of Austria-Hungary promise average wheat crops. In France, Germany, Spain and Poland the crops are fair and there are hopes for a full average crop. In Russia the drought is too prevalent to allow a hopeful yield of either wheat or rye. In Roumania, Servia and Bulgaria a short wheat crop is regarded as inevitable.

GRANT'S OLD HOME FOR PARK.

Congress Will Be Asked to Purchase the Historic Place.

The establishment of a large park at Point Pleasant, near Batavia, Ohio, the old home of Gen. U. S. Grant, is being seriously considered by the prominent and influential citizens of that county. An effort will be made as soon as Congress convenes to have it appropriate enough money to purchase 400 acres of the land, the purchase to include Gen. Grant's birthplace and the surrounding neighborhood. If the purchase is made the site will be beautified by the erection of numerous fine buildings, the planting of various kinds of trees, grading, etc. Chicago capitalists have made several unsuccessful attempts to purchase the proposed site for a private park.

MORTGAGE PAID BY MARRIAGE.

Kansas Young Woman Sacrifices Love to Save the Homestead.

Miss Julia Roberts was married to Allan Denton at Iola, Kan. The bride confessed at the altar that she did not the least bit love the man whom she was to marry, but she was only marrying him to keep a mortgage from falling due and taking their old homestead. Denton was the possessor of this mortgage, and he said he would cancel the same if Miss Roberts would become his bride. The girl's parents objected and wanted to move out of the home which had been theirs for the last half century. The girl studied several days over the proposition and finally decided to sacrifice herself to save the home.

PLUMBERS QUIT IN CLEVELAND.

They Demand $3 Per Day for Eight Hours' Work.

Over 200 steam-fitters, representing every plumbing shop in Cleveland, have gone out on a strike for higher wages and for a uniform scale for Cleveland workmen. A formal demand was made on the employers a few days ago, but the bosses paid no attention to it and the strike followed. The men want an eight-hour working day with $3 per day for steam-fitters and $1.50 for helpers. One firm has conceded the men's demands.

Scurvy is prevalent among the miners on the Stewart and Zelwyn rivers, and three deaths have resulted. Rich gold deposits have been found on the upper Stewart.

Indiana Township Reform Act Void.

The discovery has been made that an act relating to the district schools of Indiana and defining the duties of the township trustees practically nullifies the celebrated township reform act of the last Legislature. The law referred to was pased March 6 and repealed all former laws in conflict therewith, and as the reform act was passed Feb. 27 it is held that it invalidates all that portion of the reform law relating to the schools, which constitutes the kernel of the statute.

Clear Lake, Wis.	2

Details of the storm that destroyed New Richmond, Wis., on Monday evening show it to have been fully as serious as at first reported. An order for 200 coffins received in St. Paul tells the worst in a breath. The dead, at the time this is written, are estimated at 150, while the injured are not less than 400. As many of these are fatally injured the death list will be considerably increased. Fire following immediately in the wake of the storm added new terrors to the situation. The total lack of medical assistance and the injury or death of one-half the total population of the town, with fire sweeping the wreck left by the storm, constituted a situation seldom surpassed for horror.

A battle with such a list of casualties would stir the nation from Florida to Puget Sound. These deadly storms are a yearly occurrence in the Mississippi valley, and though they seldom find so many victims in a single village they are an unfailing factor in the mortality records of the country. The storms of the present season have been worse than usual. There is apparently nothing that can be done to prevent or materially lighten these periodic disasters. No human ingenuity can tell where they are going to strike. Even such salutary precautions as cyclone cellars are not always effective, as was shown in the New Richmond disaster, where many victims imprisoned under the wreck were roasted to death by the fire that followed.

The Wisconsin cyclone exhibited all the incredible freaks that go with the worst of these twisting storms, such as carrying away a 3,000-pound safe, taking the bark off trees, tearing loose boards to splinters, decapitating a man, and carrying others to considerable distances almost uninjured. The largest brick block in the town, crowded with farmers just returning from the circus, was crushed like an eggshell, and the lighter frame dwellings were whisked away like straw, while the Catholic and Baptist churches were both left standing. The property damage in the entire track of the storm cannot be less than $1,000,000.

Path of the Cyclone.

The origin of the Minnesota tornado, so far as can be ascertained, was in the valley of the Minnesota river in the vicinity of Mankato. It swept eastward to the St. Croix lake, on the border line of the two States, and culminated there about 6 o'clock in the evening in a cyclone, the main tongue of which, leaping and bounding through the gaps in the St. Croix range, followed the line of the North Wisconsin division of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railroad to New Richmond. Then it disappeared in the lake region northeast of Clear Lake and Barron.

The path of the cyclone was very close to that of the famous one of 1884, which, crossing the St. Croix near Marine Mills, just skirted the suburbs of New Richmond and then destroyed the town of Clear Lake, about twelve miles northeast. The region is peculiarly susceptible to electrical heat storms of this character, owing to the existence of a great heat pocket or basin at St. Croix lake, bounded on the eastern and western sides by high bluffs and having only few and narrow outlets into the agricultural country and pine land northeast of the lake.

In Minnesota the cities of St. Paul, Minneapolis, Mankato, Winona, Faribault and neighboring communities suffered much damage from the tornado and considerable injury through the heavy rains which followed the blow. In Wisconsin, aside from the frightful destruction at New Richmond, Hudson, La Crosse, Cameron, Barron, Burkhardt, Boardman and nearly all of the places of the well-settled portion of the St. Croix and Chippewa sections suffered heavily from wind and rain.

Urgent appeals for the necessities of life have come from New Richmond, and trains loaded with physicians and supplies were sent to that stricken town from all portions of the Omaha and Northwestern railroad lines. Troops from the National Guard of Wisconsin were ordered to New Richmond for the purpose of protecting property and policing the town. Gov. Scofield of Wisconsin issued an appeal for aid to all the cities of the State, and speedy response has been made.

Stricken Town Crowded.

St. Paul, only thirty-six miles distant from New Richmond, and Stillwater, on the west shore of the beautiful St. Croix lake, were among the first communities to respond to the cry of distress which went up from the cyclone-swept community. Owing to the destruction of the telegraph lines, though, much time elapsed before men who traveled by horse over flooded roads and tremendous windfalls of timber could reach the wires which were usable and send news of the appalling disaster.

There had been a circus in New Richmond during Monday afternoon, a parade in the morning, the show after dinner, and then preparations for the evening's entertainment. Probably 1,500 farmers, their wives and children had gone to town to enjoy the sport. Willow river, which runs by the town and flows into Lake St. Croix, was lined with vehicles.

The day was uncomfortably hot, but not until after 5 o'clock in the evening did any one apprehend danger. The memory of the Clear Lake cyclone had not passed away, but still people were not prepared for a repetition of that tragedy. Some women and children did notice the black clouds gathering in the south and west, and did notice their gyratory motion. Perhaps, as near as can be ascertained, there were 200 or 300 of all within the town during the afternoon who apprehended that there was to come out of Catfish bar, on the bosom of Lake St. Croix, one of those rolling balls of electrical flame and heat which men for want of a better name call cyclone. These people fled to their cellars and other retreats early, and many of them owe their lives to that fact.

The cyclone passed up the river from Hudson, where the damage was comparatively light. Following the general course of Willow river and the branch of the Omaha road, the storm gained in intensity as it progressed, and was at its worst when it struck the business center of New Richmond. Outlying residences in the path of the storm were stripped of shingles and boards or sides were blown off, or, as more frequently happened, were torn asunder and the fragments were scattered to the four winds of heaven. Trees were uprooted and roadways blocked, washed away or so overflowed as to be entirely unrecognizable.

The people who had crowded into the city for the circus were shopping before going home in the evening. It was at this time the storm cloud came up from the southwest. The circus grounds were outside the path of the storm, but most of the people, being in the business places, fell a prey to the terrific wind.

Fire Adds to the Horror.

There was a rush and a roaring in the air and sudden, appalling darkness. The inky blackness of the atmosphere that accompanies all cyclonic storms almost instantly engulfed the town. Through this whortled trunks of trees, housetops, store fronts, sections of buildings, animals and human beings, tossed like chips on the yellow edge of a flood.

In ten minutes was all this on, with the accompaniment of pitiless thunder and lightning, and then the horror of fire and flood. Little wonder that the survivors ran from pillar to post like madmen crying for this lost one and that and hearing no answer but the savage roar of the elements.

And, by and by, when there was no more to destroy, there came the shining of the stars and the awful calm which always rests upon the place of the dead. New Richmond was no more.

CYCLONE KILLS TWENTY.

Town of Herman, Neb., Laid in Ruins by a Storm.

A tornado which struck the town of Herman, Neb., Tuesday evening demolished its 300 houses, killing at least twenty persons and injuring 150 more. In the entire village only two buildings are left standing, a school house and one small residence. The survivors are homeless and much suffering among them is certain.

Residents of Herman had noticed the two huge clouds gathering to the north, but the storm did not seem to menace their town until about 6 o'clock. At that time the black monsters, which had seemed certain to pass several miles to north, changed their course and headed directly for the little city. In an instant panic reigned. Women, children and men fled in terror through the streets, many seeking their cellars, while others rushed to the open lands in the outskirts.

Hundreds failed to note the approach of the tornado and were caught in their homes, it being the usual hour for supper. In an instant houses were lifted from their foundations and carried high in the air, being dropped far away in unrecognizable masses of debris. Mangled bodies strewed the streets and the cries from scores of injured buried under heaps of twisted and splintered timbers added to the horror of the scene. The wrecked town was visited by a waterspout following immediately the tornado, and many are believed to have drowned in their wrecked homes.

Scene an Appalling One.

The force of the wind was such that scarce one piece of any of the many structures destroyed was left intact. The scene in the streets was appalling. Wrecked buildings and broken furniture, scarce recognizable in its dilapidated condition, were strewn all around, while dead bodies lay in many places, the corpses badly disfigured and some of them hardly recognizable.

The moans of the injured mingled pitifully with the calls of the rescuers as they pursued their humane task in the darkness by the flickering gleams of lanterns.

A relief train from Blair arrived about an hour after the storm, and the work of caring for the wounded was begun. Willing hands did what they could to help the injured and in the course of an hour the train pulled out for Blair with ninety-five injured on board.

Herman is thirty-five miles from Omaha, and is situated on the lowlands between the river and the bench or bluff which defines the west bank of the Missouri river for miles. The census gives the town a population of 500, but it has grown to nearly twice that number. There were no large structures in the village, and not to exceed half the buildings were of brick. The school house was a frame structure, as were the churches. It is in the midst of a rich farming country, and there are several fine stock farms near by, that of Nelson Morris being one of the best appointed in the State. The town was sustained by these industries and the dairy interests, which shipped many gallons of milk to Omaha daily. Herman was a prosperous village.

HOPE FOR MRS. MAYBRICK.

Pressure Brought to Bear on England by Ambassador Choate.

London papers announce that Mrs. Florence Maybrick is to be liberated shortly, as the result of the pressure brought to bear by Joseph H. Choate, United States ambassador, in favor of reopening the case.

The case is one of the most celebrated of the century. Florence Chandler Maybrick was an American girl who married an Englishman, was convicted of his murder and condemned to death. The sentence was commuted to life imprisonment and she has served eight years in Woking prison.

There has been a vast deal of agitation in the prisoner's favor on both sides of the Atlantic and special societies have been formed to endeavor to secure a reopening of her case by the English home secretary. It has always been claimed by Mrs. Maybrick's friends that the late Justice Stephen was unfair to the accused in his charge, and that Mrs. Maybrick was convicted without conclusive evidence that she poisoned her husband.

Mrs. Maybrick is the daughter of the late William G. Chandler, a well-known and respected banker and a high Mason of Mobile, Ala., where she was born in 1862. In 1881, when a girl of 19, she married James Maybrick of Liverpool, who was many years her senior and of dissolute habits. Two children were born to them.

On June 27, 1889, Mr. Maybrick, who had been ailing for a long time, was caught in a heavy rain, and on the next day was quite ill. Several physicians were called as he grew worse and all agreed that his sickness was caused by some "grave indiscretion of diet away from home." Early on the morning of May 11, thirteen days after he was taken sick, Mrs. Maybrick fell into a speechless swoon, which lasted for nearly forty-eight hours, Mr. Maybrick dying meantime. Immediately after Mr. Maybrick's death, upon the suspicions of his two brothers, and of female servants, the police were called in and searched the house, finding arsenic in quantities. It was afterward proved by the affidavit of Valentine Blake, expert for manufacturing chemists, that about three months before Mr. Maybrick's death he had sold to Mr. Maybrick, who was known to be a confirmed arsenic eater, 150 grains of white and two kinds of black arsenic. Mrs. Maybrick was arrested for murder. The jury found her guilty of murder and sentenced her to death. The sentence was commuted to life imprisonment.

WHERE THE STORM DID ITS WORST.

APPALLING RECORD OF WINDSTORMS.

TORNADOES have been known in America for a century or more, and thousands of persons have been killed and injured by them. A record of these visitations since 1794 shows tremendous loss of life and property. On Feb. 9, 1884, the country from the Mississippi river to the Atlantic was the dancing ground for sixty terrible tornadoes, which killed 800 people and injured nearly 3,000, while they reduced to ruins 10,000 buildings. During the period from 1794 down to the present time the most disastrous cyclone was that at St. Louis on May 27, 1896. The precise number of persons killed has never been known, but the dead were several hundred and the injured many more. One of the earliest cyclones on record was on May 7, 1840, in Adams County, Mississippi, when 317 people were killed. The same place was revisited two years later, when 500 were killed. The property loss was very great. Louisville was stricken in 1890, but the same city was visited by a whirlwind as long ago as Aug. 27, 1854. At that time twenty-five persons were killed. Chicago people have always congratulated themselves on the exemption of their city from the tornado, but away back in 1855 a cyclone leaped over Cook County and destroyed several lives and much property. A similar storm sweeping over the same ground to-day might kill thousands. Here is a table of some historic windstorms in this country.

Place.	Date.	Killed.	Injured.	Loss.
Adams Co., Miss.	June 16, 1840	500	...	$1,260,000
Erie, Pa.	July 26, 1875	134	...	500,000
Webster and adjacent counties, Mo.	April 18, 1880	100	600	1,000,000
New Ulm, Minn.	July 15, 1881	105	200	300,000
Grinnell, Iowa	June 17, 1882	100	300	1,000,000
Emmetsburg, Iowa	June 24, 1882	100	...	.....
Central West and Southern States	Feb. 9, 1884	800	2,500	Unknown
Louisville	Mch. 27, 1890	76	200	2,150,000
Savannah and vicinity	Aug. 28, 1893	1,000	...	Unknown
Louisiana and gulf coast	Oct. 2, 1893	2,000	...	Unknown
St. Louis	May 27, 1896	500	...	12,904,909
Kirksville, Mo.	Apr. 27, 1889	50	500	Destroyed

Savannah, Ga., and its vicinity seem peculiarly subject to destructive windstorms. That beautiful city was storm-swept on Sept. 30, 1896, and again in 1898, with much loss of life and property. On May 20 of last year a cyclone tore great holes in Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin. Seventy people were killed and the loss to property was very great. So far as property loss goes St. Louis thus far holds the record.

ARMY IN BIG BATTLE.

FIERCEST ENGAGEMENT OF THE FILIPINO WAR.

Las Pinas, Near Manila, the Scene of Hard Fighting—Natives Offer a Stubborn Resistance—Heavy Losses Inflicted on Both Sides.

A terrific battle with the Filipinos was fought at Las Pinas Tuesday morning, Lawton's entire force of 3,000 men being engaged with a large number of strongly intrenched rebels. The fight continued all day, and toward evening the rebels had taken up a position but 500 yards to the rear of the point where the engagement opened. The insurgents fought doggedly, and on several occasions attempted to assume the offensive. At one time they tried to turn the Americans' left flank, but failed.

The first real artillery engagement since the war in the Philippines began occurred during the morning through the insurgents opening fire from a masked battery below Las Pinas. The Filipinos had a smooth bore and a number of one-pounders. They were answered by six guns from the First artillery, and within a few minutes the gunboat Helena and the monitor Monadnock joined in with all their guns. The second shell fired by the Filipinos dropped and burst in the camp of the Fourteenth Infantry. Only one man, a private, was struck by fragments of the shell. He was seriously wounded.

General Lawton quickly led a reconnoissance with two companies of the Twenty-first infantry. The Filipino artillery was some distance back from the beach, and Lawton led his men between it and the water front, being hidden by the brush. When the detachment had proceeded about a mile and a half it encountered an overwhelming force of Filipino regulars and a hot engagement at close range, directly between the masked battery and the bay, followed. So heavily were General Lawton's men outnumbered that they were forced to retire. They rallied, however, and by a sharp dash succeeded in carrying the enemy's first position. This left an open space to the left, and a heavy flank fire was poured in on the Americans, compelling them to retreat to cover again.

The range was so close and the accuracy of the Filipinos so good that two officers and nineteen men of the detachment were wounded. The American troops dropped back out of range of the Filipino fire and summoned a battalion of the Ninth Infantry to re-enforce them. At the same time battalions of the Twelfth and Fourteenth Infantry were sent forward along the road.

Americans Fall Into a Trap.

The companies of the Twenty-first regiment, skirmishing along the beach, with amigo guides, found apparently a handful of the enemy, who retreated. The men of the Twenty-first followed and suddenly the enemy opened a terrific fire on the troops from the sides and the rear. The soldiers withdrew to the water's edge, finding what shelter they could, and were picked off rapidly.

After their ammunition was nearly exhausted the companies of the Twenty-first retreated, but Gen. Lawton dashed down and rallied the men. A little group made a desperate stand, Gen. Lawton, Maj. Starr and Lieuts. Donovan and Sonnelly taking rifles from the wounded men and firing at the enemy, bringing down some of the rebel sharpshooters from a tree. Finally their cartridges were all gone and they were forced to break through the enemy's flank, carrying the wounded to the main body of the troops.

After firing in volleys for a short time the Americans were ordered to fire when and where they could see the enemy. It was every man for himself and the best the men could do was to aim at the faint mists arising from the enemy's smokeless powder. It was impossible to estimate the number of Filipino dead. There were many dead bodies in the fields the Americans traversed.

This battlefield, incidentally, was formerly the scene of several of the greatest struggles between the Spaniards and the Filipinos. The Zapote was considered impregnable and hundreds of Spaniards and Filipinos have been killed while fighting over the same bridge in former contests for its possession. In June, 1897, Gens. Pio del Pilar and Trias turned the scale of war on the side of the Filipinos by deserting the Spanish army there on the eve of a decisive battle, carrying native militia with them and thereby breaking the chain of defense around Manila.

In the afternoon the whole American force under General Lawton was in action, and heavy fighting took place all along the line. The battle was apparently the most severe one that the American soldiers in the Philippines have been engaged in.

Gen. Otis seems to have been oversanguine when he reported that Gen. Lawton's gallant capture of Las Pinas and Paranaqua on Saturday had broken the resistance of the insurgents in the province of Cavite. Tuesday's engagement between the Filipinos and Lawton's forces in spite of the aid given by warships seems to have resulted in the heaviest American loss suffered since the beginning of the outbreak. Gen. Otis' official dispatch places the loss in killed and wounded at thirty, but an Associated Press dispatch sent later says the American loss is conservatively estimated at sixty.

HOW THE WAR FUND WAS SPENT

Little of the $50,000,000 Appropriated by Congress Now Remains.

Little of the $50,000,000 appropriated by Congress before the war with Spain, and made available until July 1, remains in the treasury. Allotments made by the President exceed that sum by $58,216.90, but as the War Department has a little more than $3,000,000 of its allotment on hand no deficiency will be created. Other appropriations were made by Congress for the army and navy during the war, but it was found necessary to also utilize the $50,000,000.

As the war with Spain was primarily a naval struggle, most of the money appropriated in preparation was spent by the navy. Allotments made by the President for the Navy Department amounted to $31,088,589.20, and those for the War Department to $18,969,627.68, a total of $50,058,216.90. The Treasury Department has given out this statement of the allotments made:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.
Expended for ships, etc.	$17,739,384.26
Ordnance, powder and shell	7,912,084.20
Equipment of vessels, purchase of coal, etc.	1,290,883.47
Establishment of coaling stations and repairs at naval stations	1,038,480.00
Repairing and converting vessels into men-of-war	2,230,630.00
Repairs to machinery of vessels	430,613.53

One Who Failed.

He started out to make his name
  A household word;
He has not won the bauble fame,
  And few have heard
That there is such a man as he
  Upon this twirling sphere—
He failed. But it were well if we Had more such failures here.

He missed the goal he had in view
  And grieves to-day;
The grave lies just beyond him, too—
  He's bent and gray;
Yet though he failed in winning fame,
  He's won a greater prize:
Few men have ever heard his name,
  But they'll weep when he dies.
—S. E. Kiser.

A NIHILIST'S SACRIFICE.

The dark, heavy clouds were drifting slowly across the sky, driven by a steadily rising wind. The moon, shining through the rifts, lit up for a moment the grim, Siberian prison below, throwing the low buildings into strong relief, then leaving everything blacker than before as another mass of clouds obscured its face.

Here and there around the place, a light flickered feebly, showing the position of the sentries; and they, buttoned up tightly to keep out the biting wind, paced slowly to and fro. Inside the prison all seemed still, and to the unsuspecting guards was so; but in the outer block of buildings nearest the river a scene of silent activity was taking place.

"Have you got your cursed irons off?" inquired a voice, in a whisper.

"Almost, Ivan. But do not hurry; the guard will not be round for an hour yet. What a lucky thing it was you managed to secrete these files. Now, our comrades can escape with us. Give the signal gently, Ivan."

Ivan silently went to the wall of the cell and tapped three times, almost inaudibly. A moment later two similar taps were heard from the other side.

"Yes, they are ready, Chakoff, and will await our signal. What a grand night it is for the attempt!"

"Providence is helping us to escape from this awful horror," said Chakoff.

"Escape—freedom!" broke in Ivan. "Oh, what thoughts does freedom conjure up. Back to Moscow, whether in danger or not, to try and win a woman for my wife."

"What? Then that is another tie to bind us. Although we never met before being imprisoned here, we are joined by ties of friendship that nothing can break. Let me tell you my story," continued Chakoff.

"Five long, weary years ago, when I was a free man in Moscow, I loved a woman who loved me in return, and is still true to me.

"But I had a rival, whom I never saw, nor even learnt his name, and he determined to rid me from his path.

"One night, while at my society's meeting, the police broke in and I was arrested. From what was said, I gathered that the information must have come from one who could be no other than his rival."

For a moment the men were silent; only their heavy breathing telling of their emotion. A strange recognition, indeed, to take place in the darkness of a prison cell—each to have been the cause of the other's imprisonment; to be taken to a Siberian hell to live together for many years, and then, just at the time they intended attempting escape, to suddenly discover each other's identity.

"And you were my rival?" said Chakoff. "And I told you my story, never thinking it——"

Clank! clank! clank! The guard was approaching.

"To your place—quick!" he hoarsely continued, forgetting in a moment the exciting climax through which they had just passed, and only thinking of the promised liberty.

All unconscious of the danger which threatened, the guard walked slowly to the door, and, unlocking it, looked into the cell. A deep groan smote his ears.

"Shamming again," he muttered, with a Russian oath. "A taste of my knout will do him good!"

Stepping forward, he was about to carry out his brutal intention when the figure on the floor, which the light of the lamp he carried reveal, suddenly sprang up, and seized him in a terrible grip round the waist. Simultaneously another sprang from the darkness, and stifled the cry for help which was rising. The lamp dropped to the floor and went out, and a rifle luckily fell on the rough bed of straw.

To and fro the men staggered, no sound being uttered. The emaciated frames of the convicts, desperate as they were, proved more than a match for the herculean strength of the guard, and slowly they gained the upper hand. A few moments later he was lying bound hand and foot on the floor of the cell.

"So far, so good," said Ivan, taking the bunch of keys. "Take his greatcoat, Chakoff; it may be very useful to us."

Proceeding cautiously into the open wind-swept square, Ivan arrived unseen at the next cell, and, selecting a key from the bunch, he liberated the overjoyed men inside.

A few moments served to release about twenty, who armed themselves with pieces of the chains they had so lately worn.

Suddenly a loud cry for help, instantly answered by the nearest guards, fell upon their ears, and they realized that in some way the captured man had eluded the vigilance of Chakoff. Instantly a scene of wild confusion began. The prisoners, some of them there for a very little offense, were determined to make the most of the opportunity offered them for escape, and seeing they could not leave the precincts of the prison without fighting the soldiers, they rushed to meet them. A hand-to-hand conflict followed; for the soldiers dare not use their rifles for fear of hitting one of themselves. This put them at a disadvantage, and, being taken by surprise, and also outnumbered, the convicts made short work of them, and at a signal from Chakoff, ran towards the river, and, plunging in, all safely reached the other bank.

The officer in command had been stunned by a blow from the butt end of a rifle in the hands of Ivan, which the latter had wrenched from the clasp of a wounded soldier, and, therefore, no instant chase was given; but the deputy governor was quickly on the scene, and he taking the command, a strong force set out in pursuit three hours later.

* * * * * * * * *

A band of fifteen hungry and weary men rested the night following the escape in a clump of woods. Seven men had succumbed to the horrors of the day's march through the broken country, and the remainder were sleeping, not caring whether they were recaptured or not.

Ivan was keeping guard over the camp, and, finding it a difficult matter to keep his eyes open, he walked to the edge of the wood, and looked out into the darkness. A tremor shook his frame, and he muttered a startled exclamation. In the distance, perhaps not a quarter of a mile away, he saw the camp of Cossacks!

He returned and awoke his comrade.

"What is the matter?" asked Chakoff, standing up.

"The soldiers are here," was the low reply. "They have ridden to the north of the wood, and, knowing we are here, will attack us to-morrow. Then we may expect no mercy; we shall be shot down like dogs."

For a moment Chakoff did not speak. He was thinking of Clarissa, the woman who held such a place in his heart. Ivan seemed to know what was passing in his mind.

"You are thinking of—of her," he muttered, brokenly. "And it was I who parted you. I, who in my blind hatred, spoilt two lives. And yet she was so beautiful that I would have done anything to win her for my wife. Chakoff, say you will forgive me!"

"What did I say when I told you my story last night? It is I who must beg for that. But why talk in that manner? We shall continue at once through the woods, where those brutal Cossacks with their horses cannot follow."

"You do not know the country," was the reply. "This wood only extends a few miles south, and if we followed it we should get to the mountains, where death would be slower, yet just as sure as from the bullets of our enemies' rifles! No, the only way is to vanquish the soldiers!"

"Which is impossible," said Chakoff, with a sigh; "and, therefore, we die at break of day. Friends," he continued, to those around, for the conversation had awakened the sleepers, "the soldiers are very near to us, and are only waiting a while before attacking. There are about forty of them, well armed and strong; fifteen of us, unarmed and weak. If we become the attackers and do not wait for daylight, one or two might escape in the confusion and darkness."

"There is another way," said Ivan, stepping forward, "by which nearly all of you may escape."

"What is it? Tell us your plan," said one standing near.

"The dawn is near, therefore my plan cannot wait. So to the edge of the wood and watch. Then if a number of the Cossacks detach themselves from the main body and after an hour do not return, follow Chakoff's plan."

"But what do you intend to do?" inquired Chakoff, anxiously.

"You can watch with the others," was the low reply. "But if you escape and once again se—see her"—he added, brokenly—"tell her I begged for forgiveness. You can take care of her better than I. Give me your greatcoat, Chakoff, it is neccessary. If you are successful you will get another; if not—well, you won't need one. Good-bye, and forgive me."

"Come back, Ivan! come back!" cried Chakoff. But too late. He had disappeared in the darkness.

* * * * * * * * *

As the first rays of light broke from the horizon the watchers beheld a strange sight.

A figure crept toward the Cossack camp, was challenged by the sentry and taken before the commander. An excited interview followed. Ivan was pointing towards the wood.

"Is he a traitor?" the watchers wondered. No, that could not be; but it was evident something strange was on foot.

The camp became a scene of bustle and activity, and a few minutes later three parts of the men were mounted.

They formed in charging order, and with a wild cheer, dashed along the edge of the wood in a southeasterly direction. The sound of beating hoofs grew fainter in the distance, and at last died out altogether.

Suddenly one of the anxious watchers started up and declared he heard a wild cry of terror; but he was the only one, and his statement was discredited.

An hour passed, and no sign of a return. The sun began to rise, and the remaining soldiers were becoming uneasy.

Suddenly from out the wood dashed a band of wild-looking men, armed with chains, clubs and the one who is leading with a rifle.

They fell upon the unprepared Cossacks, and, after a stubborn and deadly conflict, scattered them in all directions.

Then the visitors, after eating of the food they found, followed in the path of the company of soldiers led by Ivan.

For two miles they journeyed on, when they came to a stop before a deep chasm, at the bottom of which they dimly discerned the mangled remains of horses and men.

Descending, they searched among the gruesome mass, and at last found the body of a man, which they regarded with great tenderness. And they reverently buried him just as he was, in his large, gray coat—a look of infinite peace on his face.

* * * * * * * * *

In a cozy little room, in an English household, a man and woman were seated. On the knees of the former sat a little child.

"And why did your brother Ivan jump over the precipice, father?" he asked.

A tear came to the man's eye, and he looked tenderly at his wife.

"When he went to the officer, Ivan, he must have convinced him in some way that we were escaping round the far end of the wood. He let him lead the men there, and, going at full speed, they jumped straight over the chasm. Clarissa, is it not his bedtime?"

Marriage is growing in popularity in England. In 1897 there were sixteen persons married to every 1,000 of the population. In the previous twenty years the average was a fraction over fifteen.

SURE DEATH TO TICKS

GOVERNMENT HAS ESTABLISHED BATHS FOR CATTLE.

By the Use of Medicated Dips Each Animal Is Given a Clean Bill of Health—Will Greatly Benefit Southern Stock Raisers.

The new government regulations concerning the shipment of Southern cattle have now been in effect long enough to relieve the Southern stock raiser and Northern buyer of many difficulties previously prevailing. The government seeks to preserve Northern cattle from Texas fever, to which Southern cattle are subject. The fever is transmitted from beast to beast by means of ticks. In midwinter there is no danger of infection in the North because frost, which is fatal to the fever tick, protects uninfected cattle. With the new regulations there is a boon in the shape of a special treatment for ticky cattle, which provides all the immunity given by frost as a cleaning agent. All infected or suspected cattle must be dipped in a medicated bath, and the dip serves to give each particular bull, cow, calf or steer a clean bill of health. Consequently the cattle industry of the South has received a helping hand that will be appreciated in that and other sections of the country. There are at present only three authorized dipping stations. They are Fort Worth, Texas; Mammoth Springs, Ark., and East St. Louis, Ill.

CATTLE TICK.

READY FOR THE PLUNGE.

The dipping apparatus consists of a tank fifteen feet long, nine feet deep, and so narrow as not to permit a steer to turn around in it. Side walls ten feet above the surface of the ground serve as "splashers," and also more securely confine the animal while it is undergoing treatment. The entire inside of the tank is lined with zinc to keep the contents from leaking out and becoming wasted. The tank is filled nearly full with a dip. This is a concentrated dynamo oil, saturated with flowers of sulphur, the sulphur being about one-half of 1 per cent. of the contents of the tank.

The operation of dipping consists in driving the steer into a short alley, or chute, which is then closed behind the animal. The steer is thereby left standing on a hinged platform. This gives way with the animal, which slides with a plunge into the black, oily liquid. The beast is submerged, and walks out by the inclined bottom of the tank, saturated with the mixture. Then that steer is troubled no more with ticks, and may rub up against healthy animals without danger of infecting them. The dip mixture is sure death to fever ticks. The dipped steers are detained in a pen after the bath, where they are allowed to dry. They are inspected by government veterinarians, to see if they have been thoroughly treated, before being passed.

THE PLUNGE.

Several States have been working with the above formula, and the board of agriculture of Missouri is so well satisfied that the dipping process entirely eradicates the ticks which cause disease that an amendment was passed in the Legislature of that State authorizing the admission of Texas and Cherokee cattle into Missouri. The State board of agriculture of Illinois has been experimenting on Texas cattle at Rockford. Governor Tanner of Illinois has opened the State to dipped cattle, with a certificate from a government officer testifying that the cattle have been treated. Other States will doubtless follow suit.

In establishing dipping stations application must be first made to the Secretary of Agriculture, and permission granted before action concerning their location and construction is commenced. The bureau of animal industry furnishes inspectors at each station.

WHERE FOUR EUROPEAN BOUNDARY LINES MEET.

To be on the frontier line of four countries would be a novel experience to most men. But it is the common and daily lot of the police and customs officers shown in the accompanying picture. A step in one direction and they are in Germany; another step takes them to the Netherlands; another to Belgium, and another to the neutral territory, independent since 1814, a self-governing country of about five square miles in extent, with no army and no import duties. The German policeman on horseback is flanked by the Dutchman, the Belgian constable and a German customs officer standing in that order, and the representative of the neutral territory has his throne on a rock which is the highest part of the Netherlands.

CHIP OF THE OLD BLOCK.

Son of the "Grand Old Man" Becomes the Liberal Whip.

Admirers of the late William Ewart Gladstone, England's "grand old man," will be interested in knowing that his son, Hon. Herbert Gladstone, has been selected by the Liberal party to act as its whip in the House of Commons. The office is an arduous and important one, but Mr. Gladstone is well known for his tactful measures and has an extended parliamentary experience.

HERBERT GLADSTONE.

Mr. Gladstone was born in 1854 and received his education at Eton and University College, Oxford. Much of his political training he received from his father, and under the latter he acted as under secretary of the home office. If there be anything in heredity, he may yet become the leader of the Liberals and premier of Great Britain.

THE LATE MLLE. RHEA.

A Foreign Actress Who Became Thoroughly Americanized.

The death of Mlle. Rhea marked the closing of a remarkably successful dramatic career. Rhea had thousands of admirers in this country and whenever she was announced to appear in anything seats sold at a premium. She was born in Belgium fifty-five years ago of French parents. Owing to the dissipation of her father's fortune she was early thrown upon her own resources and sought the dramatic profession as a means of gaining a living. After playing with marked success in the principal cities of the continent she came to London for a vacation in 1881. Becoming interested in English she determined to play in the language and in one month went on the stage with the part of Beatrice in "Much Ado About Nothing." Shortly afterward she came to America and began a series of tours which brought her before the people of nearly every import- and city in the United States. She never afterward returned to Europe, except for brief visits.

FOLDING CASKS AND BARRELS.

Knock-Down Device that Saves Room and Freight Charges.

The casks used in many industries are necessarily so well made that they are delivered with their contents on the express agreement that they are to be returned when empty, and the cost of the return shipment of these casks is a very serious expenditure. With the view of cutting this expense down to a minimum, Phillis Mayotte, of Escanaba, Mich., has invented a knock-down barrel, which will reduce this item to the very lowest notch. In his design the barrel heads and staves differ but slightly from the usual type. The hoops, however, are of metal chains instead of flat iron bands, and the end links of these are held together by means of tightening bolts, by which means the tension is at all times regulated. The chains are held securely in place and prevented from slipping by means of pins, which are driven into the staves. When it is desired to ship the empty casks the tightening bolts are unhooked and the chains released, allowing the parts to separate entirely. In this shape many barrels may be shipped in the space usually taken up by one.

CHICAGO'S DAILY COW.

She Would Need to Be 127 Feet High and Give 131,000 Gallons of Milk.

If one cow was to give all the milk consumed daily in the city of Chicago she would need to be 127 feet tall and to give 131,000 gallons of milk each morning. Estimating that an average cow gives nine quarts of milk a day, it takes between 50,000 and 60,000 cows to supply the average demand. The milk comes into the city in 16,400 eight-gallon cans. To feed Chicago's daily cow takes each day about 3,000 tons of food exclusive of water. It is estimated that 17,000 people are directly engaged in gathering and distributing the milk supply. If there are 2,000,000 people in the city, each on the average consumes a little over half a pint of milk a day.

CHICAGO'S DAILY COW.

A Bostonian Colloquy.

"Before I give a definite answer to your proposal of marriage, Mr. Tioklowell," the Boston maiden said, in calm, even tones, "I must know what your convictions are in reference to our duty toward the English sparrow."

"Miss Howjames," replied the young man, "my position as regards that persecuted but interesting bird is identical with that of Thoreau."

Rather than confess that she could not at the moment remember anything Thoreau had ever written concerning the English sparrow the proud Boston maid slowly yielded.—Chicago Tribune.

Curious Offer.

A firm of English tea merchants offers to every married woman who buys a pound of its fifty-cent tea for five consecutive weeks a pension of $2.50 a week in case of the death of her husband, provided he was in good health when she began to buy the tea. The pension is to continue as long as she remains a widow.

And makes two leaves, at least, to grow

WAS A GREAT ARTIST.

Rosa Bonheur Was the World's Master Animal Painter.

In the death of Rosa Bonheur, which occurred at Fontainbleau, France, one of the master animal painters of her time passed away.

Rosa Bonheur was born in Bordeaux in 1822 and was the eldest of four children, all of whom were artists of no mean note. When she was 18 years of age her mother died and Rosa, as the eldest child, lent a hand to assist the family. In the same year—1840—she exhibited her first painting, Two Rabbits, which was well received, and soon the picture merchants began to find their way to her studio in Paris, for the family had long before this moved to the capital. One of the delights of Rosa's early years in Paris was to visit the slaughter houses, where she made a study of animals. Young girls, even if art students, were not as free to go where they chose then as now, and the consequence was that Rosa dressed in male attire, and since then she invariably followed the custom.

ROSA BONHEUR.

The first great success of Mlle. Bonheur was the Horse Fair, justly regarded as a masterpiece of its kind. Another famous painting is called Le Labourage Nivernais, which she executed in 1849. Her principal paintings number over fifty, and besides these there are numerous small paintings that are scattered over the civilized earth. Most of her animal pictures have been made from animals in her own collection. At her chateau of By she kept a complete menagerie, and often she dropped her brush to go and talk to its inmates. "To have wild animals love one," she once said, "one must love them," and indeed her fondness for animals was a passion. She had no hesitancy whatever in passing her strong hand through the mane of a lion the first time she saw one; and often, after she owned one for a little time, it would come to the bars of its cage and seem to beg for a caress.

Once while Mlle. Bonheur was painting a stampede of horses on the American plains Buffalo Bill sent her two wild mustangs as models. In return she invited him to sit for her, and her picture of Col. Cody on horseback is said to be one of her best pictures.

Mlle. Bonheur was the recipient of many honors. The Empress Eugenie conferred upon her the cross of the Legion of Honor. From King Leopold of Belgium she received the decoration of the Leopold Cross of Honor, the first woman who was ever so honored, and she also had conferred on her many other decorations.

ANVIL FOR A MONUMENT.

Queer Tombstone at the Grave of a Belleville, Ill., Blacksmith.

Volrath Moehle sleeps under his old anvil at Walnut Hill cemetery in Belleville, Ill. Moehle was a village blacksmith. For over thirty years he had toiled at the same anvil, which had been given to him by the old blacksmith to whom he was "bound out," at Pilot Knob, Mo. He became attached to the old anvil and many times expressed a wish that he should not be separated from it in death, but that it should be his monument.

MOEHLE'S ANVIL MONUMENT.

The blacksmith was never sick until his blood was poisoned by the use of an unclean instrument by a chiropodist. The only hope for his life was in an operation, but his condition would not admit of an anesthetic being used. His leg was taken off while he was fully conscious. He stood the shock well, but died a few days later. Dying, he repeated his request that his anvil should be his tombstone. In accordance with his wish the old anvil was coated with enamel, topped with a large horseshoe and set in a base of solid granite. A few Sundays after his death the monument was raised with ceremony and J. Nick Perrin delivered an eulogy. The odd monument is one of the sights of the cemetery, and to every stranger who pauses before it the story of the village blacksmith is told.

The World's Consumption of Beer.

An official document recently issued sets forth some remarkable figures regarding the quantity of beer consumed throughout the world. The annual quantity consumed, it is stated, amounts to 17,700,000,000 litres, or quarts. Of this amount 5,000,000,000 quarts are made in Germany; in Great Britain and Ireland, 4,790,000,000; in the United States, 3,200,000,000; and Austria-Hungary, 1,350,000,000. Belgium produces and consumes yearly 1,050,000,000 quarts of beer; France, 840,000,000; and all the Russias only 400,000,000 quarts.

Eugene Girardot Dead.

A telegram was received here yesterday from Bernard Trentman stating that Eugene Girardot, son of Mr. and Mrs. Justin Girardot, was killed Saturday in a railroad accident in Mexico where he was employed as an engineer No particulars of the accident were given in the telegram, but a letter is expected from Mr. Trentman tomorrow. The latter, who resides at Smithville, Texas, went to Mexico to look after the remains and they will in all probability be brought to Auburn for interment. The unfortunate man was the eldest son of the family and for several years had been running engines on southwestern railroads, going to Mexico a short time ago. His last visit to his old home here was in April, 1898, when he remained here several weeks, and he was expected home again in a short time. The news of his death was a shock to his parents and friends and they will have the sympathy of all in their bereavement. The deceased was about twenty-eight years old and unmarried.

Serious Fall

James McClellan had a hard fall this morning about seven o'clock. He was standing on a ladder picking cherries when a limb broke and the ladder fell, throwing him heavily to the ground. He struck on his head and shoulders. He was severely stunned, and considerably bruised and Dr. Swarts was called and examined carefully, but found no bones broken. Still he is very much shaken up and will be confined to his house for a time. Of course we do not know how much he may be hurt internally and there seems some injury to the spine, but we hope nothing serious.

Ice Cream Social

The. Y. P. C. U. of Showers Corners will hold an ice cream social on the grounds by the church on Saturday evening of this week. The ladies' band of Waterloo, is to furnish music. Mite 10 cents. All invited to come and enjoy it.

COURT NEWS.

Monday's Daily.

As noted Saturday the jury went out about 3:30 p. m. to deliberate on the damage case of Jackson Clem vs the the Fort Wayne Street Railway, for injuries in a runaway caused by the cars frightening his team. At 6 a. m. Sunday, they came out, having agreed to give Clem $900. Struck juries can try only the one case for which they were called, and so these two were disbanded as soon as their cases were done.

The case of Simon Hose vs Dr. W. F. Shumaker from Butler came up today. Mrs, Hose had died as a result of disobeying the orders of Dr. Shumaker, but Hose did not see it in that light, and sued the Doctor for damages on a charge of malpractice. But after spending the most of the day making changes in the regular jury, Hose concluded he had no case, and withdrew the suit and paid the costs. His attorneys were Judge Roby and Frank Brink. On the other side were Baxter & Brown and Ott Baxter and W. F. McNagny. The jury go home for a couple of days.

Tuesday's Daily.

At the adjournment yesterday, the case of Hoff vs Hoff was set for today. This is a suit brought by Chas. Hoff against Frank, for a settlement of a long standing account, he claiming there is a balance due him for services, while clerking in the Hoff grocery.

Just before the case was to be called, however, the brothers went into the witness room alone, closed the doors, and talked it over. When the doors opened, they informed their attorneys that they had settled it and that Frank had hired Charlie to clerk for him another year. It was a wise plan.

The jury is to be called in tomorrow to try a number of cases standing on the criminal docket. Among them is the case against John and Barnhart, of Waterloo, for stealing meat. It will be remembered that Geo. Booth was arrested at the same time the others were but not long ago he was let out on bail, we believe, and as his name does not now figure in the list of cases. we suppose he has turned state's evidence.

Next after these cases came some for violation of the liquor laws. These have been hanging fire for a time and will be resisted by the defendants, Ryan, Deveny, Sommers and E dridge who claim they have not violated the law.

Next Monday the jury will have to tackle the Wabash damage case from Hamilton. It grows out of the accident by which the Chappell family were run into by Wabash train east of Hamilton. Mr. Chappell was killed and the others injured.

The case of Anna Oppenheimer vs Jackson townhip has come back from the Appellate court, reversed. It appears she sued to recover on a township order issued in paymentt for some school desks delivered to the township and used. The court here held the order could not be paid, as it was issued above the legal limit. The Appellate court, however, held that it must be paid.

CLUB NOTES.

The L. L. C. met with Mrs. Ralston on Saturday with a good attendance. The secretary, Mrs. Lackey was absent on account of sickness, and Mrs. Emanuel was appointed secretary pro tem. After the usual transaction of business, the work was taken up, a large part of which was back work. Mrs. Guild gave a three minute paper the subject of which was "Individual Responsibility in Literary Circles." It was a bright little paper. The next was a paper prepared by Mrs. Lackey, and read by Miss Buckley, on "The Indians in Alaska," containing much valuable information in regard to their habits and occupation. Miss Hague then gave some back work. "Her subject, "Chicago, Her History and Advantages," was interesting and nicely arranged. "Hospitals and Training Schools" was the subject of a very valuable paper, full of interesting facts.

Mrs. Nusbaum had for her paper the very timely subject of "Our Navy." She contrasted our navy of 25 years ago with the present one, and said that few knew the valuable navy we possessed until the late war demonstrated that fact, and many would probably have never given it a thought, but today "Our Navy" was the subject on every one's lips. The literary program closed with a sweet little paper on the "Romance of Our History" by Mrs. Wildred Olds. It was full of sentiment and went to show that the commonplace is not all there is of history. The program for the next year was read by the President, and adopted without a dissenting voice. The work will be similar in character to the one just completed. Next Saturday will be the last session of the club year. The election of officers will occur and the reports of secretary and treasurer be submitted. Mrs. Swineford invited the club to meet with her and remain for 5 o'clock tea.

Action Commended.

(Angola Magnet.)

The prudence exercised by Sheriff Hathaway in baffling the designs of a lawless mob in Auburn Tuesday night, was wise and judicious, and is to be commended. What he did was not only creditable to him, but it averted a tragedy that would have been regretted by all the better element in this corner of the State. Helms' offense, deserving as it is of very severe punishment, wouldn't justify the commission of another atrocious crime Judge Hartman and a DeKalb county jury may be depended upon to mete out to the culprit the punishment prescribed by law when the proper time comes. A dignified maintenance of the majesty of the law will not permit the guilty to escape deserved punishment, nor yield results to be regretted in after years.

JUNCTION CITY, WASH, June 11, '99

EDITOR COURIER:—I am almost daily receiving inquiries from readers of the COURIER in regard to the chances to settlers in this country and I know of no better avenue through which I can answer them than through the columns of your paper. A personal answer to all inquiries would occupy too much of my time as I am now engaged as foreman of the construction force making a new road across the Bench Lands that lie at the foot of Mount Cathan. This work will require my whole attention during this summer. My good wife is making a thorough success in managing the ranch. She has a beautiful flock of pure blood Plymouth Rock chickens of which she is very proud. Chickens here lay on an average of 200 eggs annually, but require more grain feed than in Indiana on account of there being no insects here and which are a substitute for grain in Indiana. We have kept a record of the number of eggs laid by a certain number of hens and of the price received for the same and of the grain fed and the cost thereof, and we find that in one year a Plymouth Rock hen will lay 207 eggs which sold here for an average price of 2 cents a piece which would amount to $4.14 for the eggs laid by one hen. We have also found that one hen will consume one and one half bushels of wheat which is the kind of grain we feed here, and the price paid for the wheat was 60 cents per bushel or 90 cents for the wheat fed to one hen, which would leave a profit of $3 24 for the owner of the hen. But we have a flock of geese that can beat that as we do not feed them more than a few cents worth of grain, that is when there should chance to fall a snow during the winter. During the remainder of the year they feed entirely upon the grass which grows green the whole year around. Turkeys are not a success here owing to the lack of insects on which they feed and on account of the cool dewy mornings which kill the young turks, so the aristocrat here who will dine on roast turkey must pay well for the same. But there are other problems that must be taken into consideration by one contemplating engaging in the poultry business here, not the least of which is the wild cat and panther pests which we have successfully mastered by building an eight foot high picket fence around a good pasture field. These animals have not as yet got over that fence so that they are obliged to feed on my neighbors' chickens which are not so protected. Butter is a good price and in demand but the keeping of cows will require more hard labor such as making hay and raising of root crops, milking and churning, etc. Indian corn is not a success here on account of there being no hot weather, so that the Indian corn fodder shock is unknown here. Sheep do fine here and do not require other feed than the natural pasture except a few days when a snow falls. Snows do not often lay more than a few days But like the poultry, sheep require some protection from the panthers. A picket fence made from split cedar and sharpened on top is the best. Cedar of the best quality is abundant and can be had without cost, other than your own labor. I have rived out cedar boards ten feet long, that were as perfect as a sawed board. Many settlers build their first houses entirely out of cedar boards of their own make, and the shingles made of this cedar are the best in the world. But in clearing land this cedar is a most formidable impediment. The roots never rot and you can not burn the cedar logs without splitting them into rails, and the cedar stumps always remain wet even in the dryest season so that it is almost impossible to burn them out A good stump puller is the only resource. The fir stumps can be burned out but it takes patience and perserverance and much hard labor. Spruce burns readily and spruce land is considered easy land to clear. Hemlock will rot in three years. Alder in two years. But we have a curious maple here that makes travel through the wooded bottoms almost impossible. They will vine along on the ground for many rods sending up many very crooked limbs until the whole bottom is a net work of tangled, crooked limbs, such as a native of DeKalb county could not conceive of. This maple is hard to clear for it has roots in the earth like the limbs, and will grow again if cut down. There is also here a bush in the maple bottoms called devils pins. It is completely covered with very sharp spines four inches long. This maks it impossible to get through the jungle. I have some land not ten rods from our house which I have never seen; can't get to it except by balloon. In the near future I shall write again. Yours truly,

JOSEPH A. SHADE.

CONCORD.

A Surprise Party

On Friday evening, June 16, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Case in Fairfield township, occured a pleasant surprise on their daughter, Bessie. While the party was gathering, she was away on a visit to Wm. Cullough's. When she returned she found the merry party of forty young people in the yard. She then went into the house and received many beautiful birthday presents, which a number of the party had brought.

The evening was spent in games and plays, until about eleven o'clock when all retired to the parlor and sitting room where they were furnished with a delightful supper given by Mrs. Case. Soon after the supper the party returned to their respective homes. Besides the party of young people, there were present, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Cullough and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Case.

Everybody is praising Sheriff Hathaway for his coolness and courage and attention to the duties of his office, especially in the recent trouble over Jake Helms. And the COURIER wishes to add as good a word for the sheriff's wife. She managed the 250 would-be lynchers, with perfect coolness, treated them well and showed them through the jail and the sheriff's residence—that is a delegation of them, for she told them politely, yet firmly that she would not allow the whole crowd to trample over her carpets. We say, three cheers for Sheriff Hathaway, and the same for his plucky wife.

THE FUTURE OF CUBA

SHOULD PROSPER UNDER AMERICAN INFLUENCES.

The Fertile but Devastated Island Has Inexhaustible Resources that Need but Proper Management to Make Them Very Highly Profitable.

Havana correspondence:

The problem of Cuba's future is one that is now creating wide-spread interest, and it is a relief to turn from a picture of trials and sorrow to a consideration of the manifest prosperity that seems signally sure to visit the island under auspices that will bring to the front its inexhaustible resources. These need but proper management to make them highly profitable. Practically the veil is now dropped over the panorama of human woes in a past rendered inglorious by the inordinate greed of a greedy race, and it now requires only the peace purchased with the blood of the men who fell at El

SCENE IN THE INTERIOR BEFORE THE WAR.

Caney, Santiago and on the hills of San Juan, together with the generous, free-spirited enterprise characteristic of the American people to make Cuba as garden-like as in the primeval days.

Immediately after the peace protocol, President McKinley sent a special commissioner to Cuba to investigate social conditions there. This has led to a study and a grouping of the real economic situations, and the island's business salvation must come out of the workings, philanthropic and commercial, of those who are interested in redeeming a people and their latent abilities. There are existing wrongs to redress, the destruction of war to repair—most practical and important, the elevation of the people in all walks of life. It is Industrial Cuba that will now come into prominent view, and a comprehensive insight as to the future shows that the next decade is destined to see a nation ascend the stepping stones of industry, thrift and enlightenment. Political questions and military policy are now being considered only as temporary transition elements; it is the industrial movement that will conduce to settle all disturbing questions and improve conditions everywhere.

First of all, the country needs more laborers to work in the fields, and it further needs a feasible, definite plan of employing on a satisfactory basis the semi-slave laboring population now in Cuba. The conditions that have long prevailed on the plantations, and which are still to be met with, are not such as would induce European immigration. It is quite uncommon to find a laboring man who can read or write. Marriage is loosely regarded, and the Cuban and the Spaniard alike are inveterate gamblers. Field labor wages average about $17 per month, an overseer gets $85, his assistant $35. The hours of labor are long—from 4 in the morning till 8 in the night. Labor seeking employment in Cuba at present must face these conditions. Meager food and poor accommodations have so far warned away outside laborers, even the negro.

With advanced and advancing conditions, however, it is believed that unwittingly the American negro will be the pioneer of a new labor era in Cuba. It follows that what has ennobled labor in the United States will have its elevating influence among the laboring people of Cuba. Herding laborers in barracanas like so many cattle, sleeping them, feeding them, bathing them with less care than is shown to fine cattle, ruling them with whip and spur, making no provision or allowing no time for their mental or moral improvement, it is small wonder that for two centuries the sugar planter's crying need has been sufficient and efficient labor. The better grade that new conditions will maintain clears the problem, and its workings must, in the minds of practical thinkers, enter an era of prosperity for Cuba for all classes, that will astonish and attract the world.

"Americanization" must take a hand in the rehabilitation of this country so long laid desolate, and, with stable government, the same is bound to develop itself. In fact, even now the initial suggestions of transformation are manifest. Americans propose to build great docks in Havana harbor. Americans are anxious to construct railroads and telegraph lines, trolley roads and electric light plants. One has only to visit the Jurugua mines, near Santiago, to understand what American development means. Here, upon mountains which are literally of solid iron, an American company has created a small city, building its own railroad and ocean docks, and housing its employes in the neatest buildings of their kind upon the island. The supply of iron is practically inexhaustible. It can be mined, transported to seaboard, carried by ocean to Philadelphia and thence conveyed to Pittsburg, at a lower price than Michigan ore can be bought at the latter city. This is a problem in labor and transportation which is worth considerable study.

Up to date the Cuban railroad is a fearful and a wonderful thing, which American genius must shortly revolutionize. It is narrow gauge, with cars that would not make respectable firewood, and engines of a past age. The tracks are loosely laid. There is a vast amount of business to be done in railway improvement and extension, and new immigration rules, put in force recently, favor the sturdy class of laborers. These prevent the ingress of any more Chinese, whose unsanitary conditions have been a menace in the past. The health bureau has already burned down infected quarters occupied by this class. Another undesirable element is that which have overrun the eastern part of the island—shiftless negroes from Jamaica, Hayti and San Domingo. New accessions of this class are now quietly shipped back home, unless they can show the possession of $40 in ready money. Cuba does not want any more public charges—it needs the vim and muscle that built up the great West and developed the mines of Pennsylvania and Alabama.

Progressive work in Cuba for women will be somewhat circumscribed for a time to come. There are few avenues open on the island now in which the gentler sex can earn a livelihood. None are seen in the shops, none behind the counters, none in offices. The "new woman" is not in Cuba. Still, the training for hospital service and the organization of a public school system would give employment to many made destitute by the war. The value of the American trained nurse cannot be overestimated in influence and practical results. One end immediately desired is that these educate Cuban women for hospital service training—the better class of women—the refined and intelligent and now practically homeless.

One can hardly realize that Cuba is but a hundred miles away from our Florida coast. This means very ready access. There is no color line; the average inhabitants are pliable, languorous, childlike persons, with traditions of idleness and ease that must be replaced with wakeful, healthy ambition. It is believed that the hum of industry will arouse these people and evoke co-operation. It will take much of the leaven of true energetic American enterprise to accomplish it, however. Gradually, as American goods come more and more into use, there is a perceptible appreciation of the utilities. Among the younger Cubans, too, a certain emulation, a comprehension that "things are on the turn" and a new era is due—these elements urge occupation and ambition. Cuba to-day has far more in visible national resources to encourage prospector and investor than did any of the Western States manifest fifty years ago. The development of these is bound in time to make the island rich. The new importance given to Cuba by the commercial attention bestowed by this country is likely to develop it into an ocean depot, a maritime clearing house, a point for the transaction and transference of business, the value of which cannot clearly be estimated in these, the nucleus, the chrysalis days of a people newly freed from the bonds of moral and social slavery, and just on the threshold of a bright, glorious future of ambition, and hence, industry. To "Industrial Cuba" alone the economist and the promoter alike look for the grander results yet in store for this "isle of the sea!"

NO COWARD.

Anecdote of a Brave Soldier in the Santiago Campaign.

War anecdotes of men "not mentioned in the reports" are now coming in, as returned soldiers recall the incidents of battle, and many of these are full of genuine pathos. The Courier-Journal gives this story, told by a regular army officer:

In the two days of real fighting before Santiago men of the different regiments became mixed, and for a time were lost to their comrades. This condition gave rise to the report that a certain few men had shown the "white feather."

One of the officers of Gen. Lawton's division observed among his men a colored trooper of the Tenth cavalry. On being questioned, the man explained that he had lost his command, and asked to be allowed to remain where he was.

He stayed and did fine service that day. None of his white comrades were able to outdo him in deeds of bravery. He twice risked his life in assisting wounded men to places of safety, but each time escaped uninjured.

That night he asked the officer whom he had met earlier in the day to give him a note to his own commander, accounting for his absence, and certifying to his good conduct. This was willingly done, and with the precious paper clasped tightly in his hand, under cover of darkness he started in search of his own command.

The next morning at dawn, Lieut. L. started on a search for wounded men of his division, and happened to stumble over a prostrate body. He immediately recognized the brave cavalryman of the day before, who was fast losing consciousness.

After struggling a moment for strength to speak, the prostrate man held up his little slip of paper, and said, "Give it to Captain A. of L troop, if you can find him, and tell him Williams wasn't a coward."

Then, with a look of satisfaction in his eyes, his hand dropped to his side, and he was dead.

ORATOR, SCHOLAR, STATESMEN.

Spain Lost Greatest of Her Men in Emilio Castelar's Death.

The death of Emilio Castelar has removed a man who outranked all his contemporaries in the public life of Spain, and who besides enjoyed international reputation as a writer, an orator and a statesman. He was a man of wide culture and attainments. Through a stormy career he maintained his personal honor unsullied, and though actively engaged in politics he disdained the artifices of the practical politician.

EMILIO CASTELAR.

Castelar was born in Cadiz in 1832, and at an early age lost his father. He had a hard struggle to obtain an education, but by the aid of his pen succeeded. The revolution of 1854 was the starting point of his political career. He made a speech at a public meeting in support of democracy, and the next morning he was famous. He allied himself with the then democratic paper, El Tribuno, and each day saw his popularity grow. In 1866 he took part in an uprising against the crown and was condemned to death. He fled to Paris, where he remained two years, returning to Spain to be recognized as the chief of the Republican party.

After Amadeus, who was elected King by the Cortes on the expulsion of Isabella, resigned, Castelar took the folio of the foreign office in the Cabinet of the newly formed republic. Later, in 1874, Castelar became President of the republic, with almost dictatorial powers. While in this position he did good service for the state. He was unable, however, to maintain himself in power, and the republic fell. Alfonso XIII. was then proclaimed King, and since then Spain has been a monarchy.

Of late years Castelar had not taken a very active part in politics, though he was a member of the Cortes subsequent to the time when he was President of the republic. He ultimately became convinced that a monarchy was the best form of government for Spain.

Few Die in Tasmania.

If the statement of Harry Benjafied, a health officer in Tasmania, is exact, that country must be conducive to long life and its cities healthy to live in. He says that the population of Hobart and its suburbs is 40,000, and that in 1898 the total number of deaths was 561, or about 14 in every 1,000. He says, further, that of the 561 persons who died 385 were more than 65 years old, representing 9½ per 1,000 of the deaths of children and all others under 65 years old. He believes he is justified in challenging any other city in the world to produce equally favorable figures, particularly the small figures for deaths under 65 years of age. Tasmania has been under British control for about one century, and a large proportion of its population is native-born of British parentage.—New York Press.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

M'KINLEY'S BLUNDER.

As a politician President McKinley has always been ready to shift his position whenever such a change promised the slightest advantage. This characteristic has served the President fairly well in his self-seeking career, but has cost him the title of statesman and won for him the place of politician. But McKinley's latest political move—his attack on civil service—has certainly proved a blunder, and Republican editors have not been slow to point out this fact. There is not a Republican newspaper of national importance that has heartily approved McKinley's act, and many of them have roundly condemned it.

In this connection it is significant that the Chicago Tribune sees in McKinley's action a profound political blunder. Among other things, the Tribune editorially says:

It is a mistake to believe that the giving of 10,000 offices into the hands of the bosses will help to strengthen the Republican party. The people are growing to care less and less about the political creeds of the men they place in subordinate and merely administrative offices. The time for spoils politics in national affairs is forever past. No such move has strengthened the party that committed it since as far back as 1872. The exemption order will strengthen the politicians, but it will not strengthen the party.

Why give this vicious and vitiating power into the hands of political bosses when there is no need of it? How can the friends of the administration justify, defend or apologize for this intolerable order? The President has undone the good work of years and has put a blanket mortgage upon his political future and that of his party. His action is a grievous disappointment to the friends of good government.

Under the circumstances it is not necessary for Democratic newspapers to worry much over the situation. The attack on civil service is a blunder of monumental proportions. It opens the way for assaults on imperialism, as it shows the hand of the administration and its intention to send "carpet-baggers" to rob the people of the acquired possessions. Imperialism, which might not have been an issue had McKinley kept his platform pledges, promises to loom up tremendously, and shrewd Republican politicians are trembling over the prospect.

Trusts and the People.

The growth of industrial trusts has been so rapid during the last two years that no intelligent person can now plead ignorance either of their existence or of the principle which controls them. The trust is usually organized to monopolize the manufacture and sale of some article of merchandise. The first question to be settled is whether such an organization is an evil or a blessing. Monopoly finds an occasional defender who argues that production upon a large scale can be carried on more economically, but this argument is not complete. The trust cannot be justified unless it can be shown, first, that it effects an economy in production or distribution; second, that the consumer will receive a fair share of the benefits in a reduced price of the product, and, third, that the economic advantages of the trust are sufficient to outweigh the social and political evils wrought by monopoly.

To establish the first proposition, it is necessary to show that improvement in the processes of production will be greater under monopoly than under the competitive system, whereas it is generally understood that competition is the greatest stimulus to invention. The effect of rivalry is seen in the effort of each producer to furnish to the public the most perfect article at the lowest price. To accomplish this end each firm seeks to secure the brightest and most skillful operators and the most improved machinery. It is not in accord with human experience to expect this struggle to continue when a monopoly has been secured.—W. J. Bryan.

Fixing Finance.

The Senate Finance Committee is busy in New York fixing up the financial policy of the next Congress for the Presidential campaign. While professing an eager desire for "reform" in the currency, the committee is not so convinced of the benevolence of its mission as to suggest changes in the financial system that would cost votes for McKinley and the Republican party. It is evident, however, that the proposition to allow banks to issue paper to the full value of their bond deposit and to reduce the tax from 50 to 75 per cent. meets with favor.

Wildcat currency secured by the office furniture of banks is not regarded with favor by the committee, probably because the people oppose it. It is admitted that there is a scarcity of small bills, and that efforts to remedy this matter are handicapped by the banks for the purpose of forcing the "wildcat" theory on the Republican "reformers." It may be concluded, however, that the Senate committee will go just as far as it dare toward the establishing of the single gold standard and the granting of special favors to the banks.—Exchange.

Future Justice.

If there be any meaning in the signs of the times the producing millions are firmly resolved that equal justice shall be something very much more than a barren ideality, and the corporations will do well to set their house in order without the least delay. The trend of events is toward a course of treatment which will startle the world by its rigor and ruthlessness. Over the heads of the railway corporations the sword of Damocles is suspended, and it rests with them to say whether inexorable justice shall sever the sustaining hair.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Free (?) Cubans.

Newspaper readers are advised that smoking in public conveyances has been forbidden in Havana; that a workman employed outdoors, or where he may be seen by the public, must wear something more than a gauze undershirt as a covering for the upper part of his body; that cockfighting has been made a misdemeanor; that a thousand and one little errors to which the Cubans have been born and bred must be stopped forthwith on penalty of fine and imprisonment. If our administration at Havana would devote a little less attention to fool "regulations" and a little more to the big problems demanding solution, it would be more respected both there and at home.—Minneapolis Times.

Hanna Has His Way.

Mark Hanna had his way in the Ohio Republican State Convention, which simply illustrates the fact that Federal patronage in the hands of a political boss is far more powerful than the protests of the people. Of course, the platform adopted by the Republicans and subscribed to by Hanna's hired man, who was nominated for Governor, is a document full of fair promises, none of which was made to be observed, but all of which were constructed to fool the dear people and to catch votes.

It is a sign of the times, however, that the Republican boss of Ohio should allow his minions to pass a resolution condemning trusts. To be sure, the resolution is nothing but "buncombe," but even viewed as such its presence in the platform is a confession of judgment on the part of the Republican wire-pullers. When Republicans such as Mark Hanna and his followers pass resolutions against trusts and foam at the mouth over these "unlawful combines," their sincerity can be tested by asking them if they are willing to repeal the protective duties and allow competition to enter the lists against these trusts.

There is no sincerity in the Republican resolutions. The St. Louis platform has been disregarded in many of its most solemn promises, and the Ohio platform will fare no better. Practical politicians in the Republican party have no use for truth or for consistency.—Chicago Democrat.

Duty of Rich Democrats.

Democrats who are liberally provided with the world's goods, and feel that an election to the Governorship of their States or to the United States Senate would invest them with a dignity that they could gracefully bear, are entirely out of place in making demands for party recognition in the absence of having rendered the party a service upon which to base their claims. If, however, they have profited financially by a life exclusively devoted to money-getting they now have an opportunity to square themselves with the people by contributing to a campaign of education and keeping such men as Hon. John J. Lentz of Ohio, Hon. Charles A. Towne of Minnesota, and Hon. George Fred Williams of Massachusetts in the field, where their forensic eloquence and great abilities will attract recruits to the party. It will be time enough to give offices to rich men as decorations when they are able to show by their works that they have merited them.—Washington National Watchman.

A Trust Study.

The influence and power of trusts is significantly illustrated in the window glass combination. By the fourth day of July all the mills of that industry will be shut down indefinitely, and behold the result. Seventeen thousand skilled workmen will be unemployed. They only know how to make window glass and will have much difficulty in seeking other employment. But the trust must look after its own, and that is best exemplified by making another large dividend among the members of the trust.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

More Money Needed.

At the beginning of the present administration Congress was called in extraordinary session for the ostensible purpose of relieving the treasury of a deficit. The President assumed that prosperity could not return while the Government expenditures were in excess of receipts. Congress was to revise the tariff so as to provide sufficient money to keep the wheels of government moving without resort to further borrowing. Under that act the running behind has continued.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Unjustifiable Boycotting.

It is hardly the right thing for the postoffice department to discontinue the postoffice at Lake City, S. C., because the last postmaster, a negro, was murdered by a mob. Atrocious as was the murder of Postmaster Baker, it does not justify the administration in refusing postal facilities to all the people of the town. The government should be above boycotting.—Buffalo Courier.

Trusts Get It All.

The people of the United States are piling up wealth at a more rapid rate now than ever before in the history of the country, and there is no present condition to indicate a halt in this accumulation of riches. It will come to an end sooner or later, to be followed by a period of depression and reaction, as such eras always do, but there is no sign now of such a setback.—Kansas City Star.

Personal Liberties Curbed.

The "undershirt" law and the anti-smoking law went into effect in Havana last Monday. It is stated that on the first day there were something like 500 arrests. Such ill-considered, picayunish, tyrannical laws can hardly have any other effect than to convince the Cubans that we mean to institute petty tyranny instead of freedom in Cuba.—Savannah News.

Wanted—A Policy.

Some of the shouters for empire are irritated because David B. Henderson of Iowa, an anti-imperialist, is leading in the race for Speaker of the House. "Does Henderson stand by the policy of the administration?" they shout. He can readily answer this and floor his interrogators by asking, "What is Mr. McKinley's policy?"—New York World.

Peffer's Whiskers Again.

The Republican journals are rapidly discovering that Senator Peffer's whiskers contain an honest and faithful bosom.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

OVER 500 YEARS OLD.

Famous Inn in England that Has Been Continuously Run Since 1356.

What is probably the oldest licensed inn in the world, the Seven Stars at Manchester, is in danger of destruction. In 1356, the year that the third Edward won the battle of Poictiers, this inn was licensed. The earth was flat in those days, and 136 years were to elapse before Columbus proved it round. It was ten years before the foundations of Kremlin were laid, and thirty years before Timur the Tartar began his invasion of Persia. Nearly three hundred years were to elapse before the Manchu dynasty sat on the throne of China, and a hundred before Constantinople fell before the Turkish arms. Charles IV. of Burgundy sat on the throne of that weak shadow of mighty Rome, the German Empire, and the Counts of Hohenzollern had not yet been invested even with the province of Brandenburg. Spain was composed of separate kingdoms and the Moors held the southern part of Iberia. France was overrun by the English and the French king a prisoner in London. In what is now the United States "the rank thistle nodded in the wind and the wild fox dug his hole unscared," while in Mexico and South America the remnants of that great pre-historic empire which once spread out its power from the buried cities of Honduras and Yucatan were preparing for extinction in the form of the empires of the Montezumas and the Incas.

In that inn used to gather the Flemish weavers from Bruges, fleeing from the wrath of Alva and bringing to England the knowledge of the textile arts, which subsequently was carried to this country. In a room over which is the inscription: "Ye Guy Faux Chamber," lodged for a time the conspirator who tried to blow up King and Parliament in the "gunpowder plot." Once in the Cromwellian wars a "great and furious skirmish" took place between the Roundheads and the Cavaliers around the inn, and when Fairfax, whose descendant is a doctor in Maryland, held the city for the Parliament, his soldiers filled the Seven Stars with the clanking of their corselets, the jingling of their spurs and their solemn carousals. When Charles Edward marched into England to fight for the throne of his ancestors the Seven Stars furnished accommodation for many of his soldiers, and was the headquarters of the Manchester regiment in the Prince's service.

It is now announced that the site of the ancient inn is wanted for a factory, so unless a public movement is started to purchase the inn and preserve it the old landmark is doomed. With all its years and all its memories it does seem as if this old inn was entitled to a continuance of its existence.

A PRESIDENT IN THE MIRE.

Van Buren Was Convinced that Better Roads Were Needed.

Dumping a man in a mud puddle is rather a drastic way of changing his convictions, yet such was the means by which President Van Buren became a convert to a good-roads movement started in Indiana away back in the '30s. There had been considerable protest against the condition of the Western highways, but Van Buren was opposed to what he looked upon as a needless expenditure of money in times of financial stress. Finally he decided to make an investigation for himself, and planned a trip from Washington to St. Louis. The stage coach run between Indianapolis and Terre Haute was under the charge of a Whig named Hale, who determined to give the President a practical demonstration of the necessity of additional improvements over his part of the road, at least. He entered into a contract with his driver, Mason Wright, the latter agreeing, in consideration of a $5 hat and relief from all damage that might accrue, to dump the President in one of the deepest mud holes along the line.

WHERE VAN BUREN WAS UPSET.

The plot was carried out in all its details, and the Presidential party upset under an elm tree near Plainfield, Ind. The President landed on all fours—if such a description is possible—and, as a dutiful lieutenant, the Secretary of State followed his lead and wallowed in the mud and water. Wright caught the stage and did not get very deep in the mud. President Van Buren and his secretary floundered around until they found a root of the old elm, and, standing in the mud almost up to their waists, they waited until the crowd pulled them out.

The historic old elm tree stands as stately and as full of life now as on the day when its roots gave the President of the nation a plunge. But the road that passes along beside it is no longer a mire of mud. The highway passed under the State and private tollgate regime and was improved into passable shape.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Nature.—Nature gives us perfection, because nature is the handiwork of God; man ever presents imperfection, because he seeks to make himself.—Rev. W. H. Carwardine, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Purest Thoughts.—When we learn how to think upon the best and purest thoughts, the body will begin to express harmony, and not until then.—Rev. F. E. Mason, Christian Scientist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Spirit of Criticism.—The spirit of criticism has extended to the people at large, and faith has decreased. We are in an age of transition from theology to science.—Rev. Joseph Stolz, Hebrew, Chicago, Ill.

Need of God in Our Lives.—We need more of God and Christ in our lives, and nothing should be done to lessen or weaken the religious faith of the people.—Rev. Dr. Conaty, Roman Catholic, Washington, D. C.

The Fatherhood.—The Fatherhood cannot make itself effective unless in you and in me, and in us all, it provokes the spirit of filial confidence and affection.—Rev. Dr. Behrends, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Evolutionary Process.—The evolutionary process does not cease when man's present form is attained, but its forces are now chiefly devoted to developing and perfecting man's mind, heart and character. This points quite conclusively to a continuance and higher use of these spiritual faculties in a life to come.—Rev. C. W. Wendte, Unitarian, Los Angeles, Cal.

True Education.—The true education is that which awakens original power in the child. It is not so necessary to make the child study as to study the child to incite him to his best development.—Rev. B. Fay Mills, Evangelist, Boston, Mass.

The Unmatchable Revealer.—The church will hold Christ as the unmatchable revealer. In him is revelation of the earth beneath and the heavens above—life—God. It will hold him the Divine One.—Dr. G. H. Combs, Kansas City, Mo.

A Universalist.—I am a Universalist, not because I believe less in God, Christ, man and destiny than my brethren of the other churches, but because I believe more in these great eternal verities.—Rev. I. P. Coddington, Universalist, Rochester, N. Y.

Pagan Philosophers.—The wisest and best of pagan philosophers have but dived deeply into the innermost recesses of the soul and evolved, developed and demonstrated natural truths to mankind.—Archbishop Williams, Roman Catholic, Boston, Mass.

A Father of Infinite Love.—We sing praises to our God, and worship him as a father of infinite love, and yet we tremble and quake whenever his thunder and his lightning startle us with their flash and roar.—Rev. G. W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City, Mo.

Problem of the Church.—The greatest problem of the church is first to make good the purpose of its own existence, the bringing of the world to God. The commission is "to all the world and to every creature."—Rev. John A. Wilson, Methodist, San Francisco, Cal.

The Character of Christ.—It makes little difference to what church a man belongs so long as he imitates the character of Christ. There is no reason why a Catholic should not stand in this pulpit and preach to you.—Rev. Dr. Eaton, Universalist, New York City.

Immortality.—The fact of immortality underlies all the history of the Bible, enforces its commands, gives significance to its promises. Jesus announced the fact, and in his own clear, large way made it an eloquent hope in men's cold hearts.—Rev. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Life of Jesus.—The life of Jesus proved that there was an unseen power which he declared was spirit, and by means of which he overcame every ill of the flesh, and even the flesh itself, thus proving the truth of his words: "The spirit alone giveth life, the flesh profiteth nothing."—Dr. Alfred Farlow, Christian Scientist, Kansas City, Mo.

Forgiveness of Sins.—Forgiveness of sin requires that the spiritual nature, deeply wounded by sin, be made over new and whole. That can be done only by him who created the soul. Small wonder the Jews found fault when Christ said to the paralytic: "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee."—Rev. R. L. Gerhart, Lutheran, Bellefonte, Pa.

The Historical Sabbath.—It is impossible for many Jewish people to faithfully observe the historical Sabbath. Therefore, we consecrate the actual hours of leisure which they enjoy on Sunday morning by Jewish worship and sermon. We feel it our duty to provide spiritual instruction on the day of rest, which many of our people only have on Sunday.—Rev. Dr. Schulman, Hebrew, New Yory City.

Flowers of Speech.

Picturesqueness of phrase is habitual to the Irish. The following "flowers of speech" are from Mr. Macdonagh's "Irish Life and Character":

An Irishman was asked in America how he was getting on. "Middlin'," he said, "middlin'; but faix, I'd rather be a gaslamp in Dublin nor President of the United States."

An Irish navvy was complaining of his foreman. "He'd not stir a finger himself to lift a red herring off the gridiron, but he'd ask yon to shift the Rock of Gibraltar."

Gold in Clay.

It has been discovered that the clay of which our common red bricks are made contains gold, about 25 cents' worth to every ton of bricks. An ingenious person has calculated that, as there are at least 5,000,000 tons of bricks in London, there must be at least $1,250,000 worth of the precious metal locked up in the walls of that metropolis alone.

Only One Regiment Necessary.

In his new volume on China Arnot Reid declares that 1,000 European soldiers could conquer that country.

Bismarck's Boomerang.

There can be no doubt that the war indemnity paid by France to Germany after the Six Weeks' War was a boomerang to score up against Bismarck. The good it did to France is inestimable. Prior to the war there was an enormous amount of money locked up in the form of small savings. The appeal of the government to the people set this sum into profitable motion, and to the amazement of the world, France paid off her creditor in less than half the stipulated time. This gave a vast impulse to business enterprise of all kinds, and since then France has steadily become more wealthy. In Germany the effects were less beneficial. The huge influx of gold sent up prices with a rush. A mania for speculation set in, followed by the inevitable crisis. Most serious of all, however, was the unexpected discovery of France's strength. Bismarck intended to cripple her forever, but he only revealed her immense power, and this, of course, necessitated the gigantic military burdens which year by year weigh more heavily upon Germany.

Exhibits at Paris.

There will be a large exhibit from this country at the Paris exposition in 1900, which will prove very interesting to all, but no more so than the news that the famous American remedy, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, will cure dyspepsia, indigestion and constipation. To all sufferers a trial is recommended.

Farms from the Sea.

In California inland seas are being turned into farm lands. Thousands of acres in the San Joaquin Valley that were only watered wastes full of tule and peat bogs have been made into the best land in the State, and more are being improved. Through the land a canal three miles long, one hundred feet wide and ten feet deep was dug. Then levels twenty feet wide at the base and as wide as a good wagon road at the top, twelve feet above the water line, were built. After dredges took all the mud from the enclosures, pumps drained them dry, leaving excellent farming land.

The Summer Bath.

Nothing is more refreshing and invigorating in summer than a daily bath. But to have it beneficial soft water and good soap must be used. Ivory Soap is the best for the purpose; it is pure, dissolves quickly, sweetens and purifies the cuticle, gives a healthful glow to the skin, and leaves it white and soft. Early in the morning or just before retiring at night will be found the most suitable times for bathing. ELIZA R. PARKER.

GENERAL LUNA KILLED.

Assassinated by Guard at Aguinaldo's Headquarters.

General Antonio Luna, one of the bitterest foes of the Americans in the Philippines, has been assassinated by orders of General Aguinaldo, the Filipino leader. Luna has recently found himself in opposition to his chief's views, and has not only disobeyed his orders, but at one time stopped Aguinaldo's peace commissioners while on their way to treat with the Americans. Aguinaldo ordered his death and his orders were carried out by some of his fanatical followers.

The assassination of Gen. Luna occurred on June 8, at Kabanatuan, to which place he had gone to confer with Aguinaldo. He had just previously been promoted to the rank of major general by the Filipino leader. By a preconcerted plan he was kept waiting at the door of Aguinaldo's headquarters until his patience became exhausted. After demanding an admission several times he attempted to force his way in. He drew his revolver, but before he could use it he was seized by Aguinaldo's guards and one of them named Ney stabbed him several times, it is said. Gen. Luna's aid, who was near him, rushed to the general's rescue, but was seized and disarmed. Luna died a few minutes after being stabbed.

GENERAL LUNA.

It is said that Luna had become so importunate in his demands on Aguinaldo for power and increased authority that the Filipino leader decided that Luna's death was necessary for his personal safety and the Filipino cause.

WIPES OUT DEBTS.

Effect of the Federal Statute Framed to Relieve Men of Obligations.

Since the Federal bankruptcy law went into effect a little less than a year ago its provisions have been availed of in every State and territory. Thousands of debtors, large and small, have gone into court asking to be relieved of their burdens of obligations, and the courts have granted them relief in a great sum—aggregating more than $57,000,000. From forty-five cities in different parts of the United States in which Federal judges sit information relating to the working of the law has been obtained. In some cities few have sought the benefits of the law, while in other communities a grand rush has been made to get out from under the heavy weight of debt.

In nearly all of the court districts—embodying two-thirds of all in the country and embracing all the more important ones—from which reports have been received, the law is said to be working satisfactorily. In this connection it is said that little evidence appears that an undue advantage of the law is being taken by insolvents. While the amount of liabilities wiped out by the operation of the law is large, it is explained that the greater part of this consisted of old debts that could not have been collected anyway.

The number of petitioners discharged in the different districts and the amount of liabilities obliterated in them are, in round numbers, as follows:

OTIS TO HAVE 35,000.

President Decides to Give Him More Men than He Asked.

Under a plan that has been arranged between President McKinley and the officials of the War Department, the American fighting force in the Philippines will be increased to 35,000 men, all regulars, by the beginning of the dry season. This number is 5,000 greater than estimated by Gen. Otis as necessary to quell the insurrection. The administration, however, has come to the conclusion that it is better to have a few more troops than just enough required for all purposes in the Philippine campaign.

After a great deal of consideration of the subject the determination was reached by President McKinley and his advisers that in order to provide Gen. Otis with 30,000 troops it would be necessary to give him a surplus number, so the sick, wounded and those whose terms of enlistment had expired would not reduce the force below the estimate of the commanding general. All these additional troops will be taken from the regular service.

Plans which the officials consider satisfactory have been prepared, and will be carried into effect when the proper time arrives. Officers on duty at the War Department said that these plans had been carefully arranged and would be successfully executed without detriment to the service. The plan likely to be adopted is to send two-thirds of nearly every infantry regiment and of some of the cavalry regiments to the Philippines, retaining the remaining third of each regiment for home service and keeping every organization recruited to its full strength.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Seek to Recover $5,589—Young Woman Not Held for Murder—Caught Fire from a Stove—Safe-Blowing by Burglars—Murderer Is Captured.

The Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association of Grant County held a meeting in Marion and passed resolutions condemning the County Commissioners for appropriating illegal fees, and took steps to recover the money. The commissioners were accused of misappropriating county funds, and they demanded an investigation by a non-partisan board. The judge of the Circuit Court appointed the board as requested. Their finding was that Commissioner Frank M. Chase had received $1,925; Joseph Lugar, $1,872; Isaac Carter, $1,792. After the committee had made their report to the Circuit Court the commissioners refused to refund the money to the county treasury. Legal action will now be taken to recover it.

Attempt to Kill Justified.

Cora Woods, aged 18, who shot at Harry Hawkins, her fiancee, and attempted to kill him, was released from arrest and the charges against her dismissed in preliminary trial at Anderson. It was shown that she was justified. She claimed that the man had been besmirching her character. She delayed until she got the information first hand, then provided herself with a pistol and waited for him. He was passing in his buggy when she saw him. She seized the revolver, ran out on the porch and fired five bullets at him.

Aged Woman Burned to Death.

At Terre Haute, Mrs. Neukom, aged 76, was burned to death after she had made a desperate effort to smother the flames in which she had become enveloped by her dress catching fire from a spark from the kitchen stove. No one was present except a small grandchild. The aged woman got into bed in the hope of smothering the flames, but the covers ignited and she had to flee again.

Burglars Blow Open a Safe.

Burglars broke into the general merchandise store at Carbon and with dynamite blew open the large safe. The force of the explosion was so great that it completely wrecked the safe and destroyed some valuable papers. Only about $100 was secured.

Murderer Is Taken.

David Harris, who shot and killed Geo. Brown in Seymour, was captured in Little York and was taken to Salem for safe keeping, as threats of lynching had been made.

Statistician Connor has just completed a compilation of reports on the Indiana wheat crop for this year, which he finds is but 49 per cent favorable on a basis of 100 for perfection. The condition in the northern division is but 29.60 per cent, in the central section but 52.10 per cent and in the southern counties it makes the best showing, with a percentage of 67.25. There are about 2,700,000 acres in. It is estimated that the crop will fall below 20,000,000 bushels. It is the poorest crop in Indiana for many years and the showing was so bad this spring that hundreds of thousands of acres were turned under. The only county in the State making a favorable showing is the far-famed and abused Posey. It will have almost a full crop.

The State Grand Army encampment committee finds that it has a surplus of $1,470. The sham battle receipts, gate and privileges, were $2,332, of which $2,020 was from gate receipts at 10 cents each person. The total receipts were $6,095.

At last the terrible green worm that has been eating the bark off of shade trees and chewing the leaves for dessert, has run up against the real thing now. It is paris green. Another good remedy is to stuff brick dust down the worm's throat with an umbrella, and, although tedious, it is sure.

Several counties in the southern part of the State have been overrun recently by a band of gypsies numbering almost two hundred. They scatter and take in a wide territory as they move. They tell fortunes, steal and do other acts of depredation until whole communities are robbed.

At Marion, three prisoners were caught when they had made a hole in the floor of the jail almost large enough to escape, by heating the stones with gas and then pouring on water. The place was directly over a tunnel which leads from the jail to the court house boiler rooms as a conduit for steam pipes, and if they had gotten through, escape would have been easy for all.

A Few Timely Pointers.

The up-to-date farmer has learned the wisdom of doing his own thinking, and in selecting a binder or mower to weigh carefully the actual points of superiority and to avoid mere "talking" or "selling" points. The "life" of a machine depends largely on its main frame, which should be solid enough to outwear the working parts and yet not heavy enough to tear itself to pieces through its own inertia. The Deering Ideal Binder has a high-carbon steel frame, hot-riveted at the joints. This machine has stood the most severe tests ever put on a binder. It has a cutting apparatus that will cut any crop that grows; elevators that will elevate anything it cuts; a simple reel with greater range of adjustment than any other, operated with a single lever; the famous Deering Knotter and Binder which never misses; the only bundle carrier worthy of the name; and finally Deering Roller and Ball Bearings, making it the lightest draft binder that ever cut a swath.

LETTERS TO MRS. PINKHAM FROM WOMEN RELIEVED OF SUFFERING:

Mrs. George Osmun, of Belvidere, Warren Co., N. J., writes:

"Suffering as I had from weakness, irregularities and backache for several years, a release from this suffering was a blessing. Oh! how I wish more suffering women would accept your kind offer and be relieved. There is no need for women to suffer. Mrs. Pinkham's advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will relieve them."

Mrs. Ida Peters, Milan, Tenn., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—When I wrote to you the first time asking your advice I was a great sufferer. Menstruations were irregular, sometimes a week too soon and then a week or two late, and when they appeared were very profuse, great pain and tenderness in the bowels, pain in back and limbs, leucorrhœa all the time. I was weak and nervous and had no appetite. Burning and choking sensation in my throat. I received your reply and followed all your instructions and now I am cured. I owe my recovery all to Mrs. Pinkham's advice and her wonderful remedies."

Mrs. Maggie P. Stine, New Berlin, Pa., writes:

"I have suffered with terrible backache in the small of my back for about seven years, and could never get anything to help me. I tried several physicians, but found no help. I have now taken three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and feel like a different woman."

Mrs. H. A., 124 Cedar Street, Owosso, Mich., writes:

"Nearly three years ago I wrote to you asking advice in regard to my health. I was so miserable; suffered from painful menstruation and backache, was nervous, dizzy and faint. I received such a kind letter from you, telling me just what to do. I followed your advice and I now am recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I thank God for this pain destroyer."

Mrs. Pinkham Saves Mrs. McDaniels' Life.

"Nearly all the time for seven years I was confined to my room. I consulted the best doctors in my town, and tried almost everything I could think of, but received no lasting benefit. My whole body was diseased, and the pains I suffered no tongue can tell. I believe there is not a pain that any woman ever suffered but what I have had. I was troubled with backache, nervousness, a burning and constant distress in the stomach, painful menstruation, leucorrhœa, and at times very bad headaches. At last seeing your remedies so highly recommended I decided to try them, and to write to you concerning my troubles.

"After receiving your letter of advice, I followed your directions and have now taken four bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one of Blood Purifier, one-half box of Liver Pills, and one and one-half packages of Sanative Wash, and can say that I feel like a new person. I think I should not have been on this earth now, had it not been for your medicine. I cannot thank you enough for your advice to me and your wonderful medicine."—Mrs. Georgia McDaniels, Viewfields, South Dakota.

Mrs. Pinkham's advice is promptly given without charge to all suffering women who write to her at Lynn, Mass. for aid.

SUMMER CATARRH

Catarrh of the bowels, because it is most prevalent in the summer months, is called summer catarrh.

Its surprises many that bowel trouble is catarrhal. Dr. Hartman's books make this plain. Write to the Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O., for them. They tell all about catarrh and how Pe-ru-na cures it wherever located.

"I had chronic diarrhœa for fifteen years," writes Mr. T. E. Miller, Grand Prairie, Tex. "I tried many medicines and doctors in vain. At last Pe-ru-na was recommended, and it relieved and cured me at once."

Mr. John Harting, 633 Main St., Cincinnati, O., writes: "My wife and myself took your Pe-ru-na for chronic diarrhœa and it cured us. No doctor or medicine we tried before helped us."

Mr. Edward Wormack, Ledbetter, Tex., writes: "Pe-ru-na for bowel troubles is unequalled by anything in my experience. I owe my life to Pe-ru-na, and shall always recommend it to those suffering as I was."

Mr. John Edgarton, 1020 Third Ave., Altoona, Pa., says: "I suffered from dysentery for three years I took Pe-ru-na and am now well."

The outlook is for plenty of the disease in this state.

BAREFOOTED BOYS.

But They Enjoyed the Wedding Feast as Well as the Others.

It is not often that barefooted boys are seated at the wedding feast, but Auburn boys are an exception.

Mr. Teneyck, of the North End green house, is a prompt business man, and fills his contracts at all risks. On Tuesday, he received an order for several dozen fine white carnations from Mr. A. H. Parkhurst, who on Wednesday was to marry Miss Hattie Firestone up in Franklin township. Teneyck took the package to the express office that evening, under the impression they would go right over. But the next morning he was called to the phone and Parkhurst said the flowers had not come, and he must have them. So Mr. Teneyck started out, picked up his son Shermie, and took along two other boys, George Coe and Elmer Reed, all three barefooted and at play in their weekday clothes, got a rig, drove to the express office, only to find the package gone to the station. The package was taken out, and the boys headed for Butler. There they could learn nothing of Parkhurst till they thoughtfully went to the postoffice. There they learned that Parkhurst was at that hour getting married at Mr. Firestone's four miles north in the country. Then the lads headed north and reached Firestone's after the company were seated at the table. Mr. Firestone had their horse put up, and made the boys wait for dinner. In vain they protested they were hot, dusty, barefooted in their everyday clothes. But he said they had earned the feast and they should have it. Then the lads tried to compromise by saying that they could eat in the kitchen. But Firestone said the place where the guests were, was good enough for boys who had come fourteen miles to bring flowers. The guests had just finished, and the three dusty lads were led into the dining room. Three chairs were placed and six brown, bare feet and dusty legs thrust under the loaded table, and business began. Business stopped, only, when "All their weel swalled kytes believe,

Were bent like drums."

As Burns would say. And the lads were still saying, "Oh, Ma! You ought te see the fine things they had and such lots of 'em!" They are anxious to get another job of the same sort.

No Right To Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, skin eruptions and wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate the stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nreves, bright eyes, smooth velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good-looking, charming, woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at H. B. McCord's Drug Store.

A Doubting Thomas

The Butler Record quotes the very plain and reliable statement made in the COURIER, recently, that the county is out of debt. Then immediately following this, the Record has the Dispatch's item which says:

We have heard from a very unreliable source that the county is out of debt, but we have seen no figures or official statement. If the county is out of debt it is due to the taxpayers to know it and our commissioners should not delay such satisfactory information one day.

Now if this doubting Thomas will stop to consider, he will see how it is. The treasurer has advertised, and the Dispatch knows it, that "all outstanding" orders are called for and that no interest will be paid on them after June 10. In the second place, if the Dispatch has any new orders, and will present them at the Treasurer's office, they will be cashed. Now what more proof do they want.

Bismark's Iron Nerve

Was the result of his splendid health. Indomitable will and tremendous energy are not found where Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, and Bowels are out of order. If you want these qualities and the success they bring, use Dr. King's New Life Pills. They develop every power of brain and body. Only 25 cents at H. B. McCord's Drugstore.

Settled by Marriage

The young lady whose affections had been trifled with by Kaufmen, noted in Saturday's COURIER, arrived from Mishawaka Saturday afternoon and soon afterward secured Kaufman's release from the county jail, arrangements being made to pay the costs growing out of his arrest. County Clerk Long was then visited and a marriage license secured, after which the couple, chaperoned by Deputy Prosecutor Pomeroy, repaired to the latter's office where they were married by Rev. Guild, Mr. Pomeroy and Deputy Sheriff Hartford acting as witnesses to the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Kaufman left for Garrett Saturday evening, seemingly as happy as though their marriage had been consummated under the usual circumstances.

Any Old Sore

Cut, Bruise, or Sprain quickly healed with Banner Salve the greatest healing remedy in the world.

Woman's Mysterious Ills.

Explanation of their nature by Dr. Hartman, who tells how to cure them.

YOUNG women are constantly puzzled about their health. Indeed female troubles puzzle all women. Older women have experience, but few possess knowledge of the subject. The periodical suffering is painful. It is accompanied by many varying sensations that distress. How much of this is necessary is a matter of guesswork. The whole question is shrouded in professional mystery.

Dr. Hartman's book for women, called "Health and Beauty," treats these matters with delicacy, and at the same time with clearness. Write to the Pe-ru-na Medicine Company, Columbus, O., for it: it is mailed free. It is a practical printed talk to women. Dr. Hartman defines women's diseases as catarrh and tells how Pe-ru-na cures them.

Mrs. C. C. Naeve, 386 Morrison St., Portland, Ore., writes as follows:

Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

DEAR SIRS:—"I began to take Pe-ru-na when I lived in Columbus, O., in 1887, and have used it and the Man-a-lin ever since whenever I needed medicine. I have never found an equal to Pe-ru-na for regulating the menses, and before I began to take it I was never regular and always had more or less pain. I had tried many different medicines before I saw Pe-ru-na but without success."

There is nothing mysterious about the action of Pe-ru-na. It is not a "cure-all," but it cures catarrh wherever located, and there may be catarrh in any organ of the body, as all are lined with mucous membrane.

Mrs. M. C. Mehl, 504 Walnut St., Columbia, Pa., says: "I have been troubled with catarrh and a soreness in my bowels for several years. I tried everything that was recommended. I tried Pe-ru-na and am happy to say that I am now entirely well."

Dr. Hartman's advice may be had without charge by any woman who will write for it. His book on Chronic Catarrh is also mailed free. It explains the danger of local treatment. All druggists sell Pe-ru-na.

COURT NEWS.

Wednesday's Daily.

The cases against Hiram Barnhart, Geo. Booth and David Johns of Waterloo for stealing meat came up today. After considerable hesitation Johns and Booth plead guilty, and Barnhart's case is set for July 5.

—The case against Ryan for selling liquor to a minor came up this afternoon. It turned out that Ryan was not there when the liquor was obtained, but it was bought of his bartender Al. Treesh. If this point is proved, we presume a case will be brought against Treesh. Attorneys are arguing the case as we go to press.

Thursday's Daily.

At the close of the case against Ryan yesterday, the result was found as the COURIER foreshadowed, that is, Ryan was cleared, as he had neither sold the liquor, nor given directions for any one else to do it.

The case against Deveny came up this morning, and there was some delay owing to the illness of Tom Patterson. The parties had to go to his bedside and take his deposition. It appears that the charge against Deveny is, that he sold liquor to parties when they were not in the room described in his license. He had had Ed. Webb come to see about some carpenter work late one evening and they talked it over in another room. While they were talking, it appears Tom Patterson came in and it is said that when they had done with the matter, Deveny told the men he would "set em up." He went into the barroom, and filled some glasses with beer, brought out and gave the men to drink. It is asserted by the prosecution, that on the preliminary hearing before the justices, Patterson told that the party "turned cards" to see who should pay. But now he does not agree with this. Everybody but Deveny seems not to "remember."

The case was continued to a future day.

The Rose Reception.

A delightful party was enjoyed by a large number of lady guests last evening at the home of Mrs. F. T. Zimmerman, on West Fifth-st. The hostesses of the occasion were Mrs. Zimmerman, Mrs. Sallie Weamer and Mrs. Albert Weaver.

The home was beautiful with many lights and tasteful decorations, and the guests were cordially welcomed by the ladies receiving. The rooms were prettily decorated with roses and green foliage and rose colored lights, and the guests with their pretty light summer gowns, donned to do honor to the occasion, showed by their bright, happy faces that they enjoyed it to the utmost.

The receiving ladies were assisted in making the guests welcome and comfortable by the daughters of the homes Miss Georgia Zimmerman and Miss Marie Weamer, with Miss Lela Morse of Angola, Miss Anna Boggis and Miss Elsie Caruth. The cool, dainty refreshments were greatly enjoyed and each guest on leaving the dining room was presented with a beautiful rose as a souvenir, and each one on leaving this scene of brightness and beauty assured the hostesses that they had in truth enjoyed a most delightful evening. The sweet strains of the Italian Orchestra from Fort Wayne, added much to the occasion.

Perfection Found at Last

Decatur, Ill., Jan 24, 1898.

Dear Sirs:—I received a gun shot wound in '64 while in the army which caused partial paralysis of the bowels and from that time to the present I have had to use a laxative. I have tried a great many kinds of medicines in that time but have never found any as effective or that has been as near natural as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Yours truly, JOHN ARMSTRONG.

The Endeavors.

The meeting has so far been a splendid success, and no one can attend them without feeling an interest in their exercises or recognising the great value of their work.

With exception of one or two absences everything on the program went off yesterday as arranged. We hear high compliments to Judge Roby for his welcome address, and those for the C. E societies by Mr. Brosy, Leila Baker, Mrs. Streby and Maggie Sherlock were good. Rev. Smith of Angola gave the response, a neat speech full of good words for the cause. He also spoke on the Necessity of Bible Study; Chaplain Medbury spoke on the same lines as did also, Rev. H. Clark of St. Joe. "The C. E. and Modern Missions" was the subject of an address by Rev. J. O. Rose, pastor of the Christian church at Kendallville. All these speeches were excellent.

EVENING.

The meeting in the evening called out a vast attendance. Secretary H. G. Provines had it in charge, and the devotional exercises were led by Mrs. Dr. Carey of Spencerville who is a very graceful and earnest worker. Of course there was an abundance of good singing for it is a part of the C. E. creed to cultivate the voice of praise and song. Anna Cuppy presided at the organ.

Mr. Medbury's lecture was a treat worth going far to hear. He won the hearts and heads also, of our people, when he lectured in the M. E. church some months ago, and this effort was equally successful.

After the meeting closed, all C. E. people were asked to go down to the church parlors for a reception. They found the rooms lovely with decorations fixed up by the several Auburn C. E. societies. Here was given a social hour, made all the more enjoyable by a treat of ice cream and cake. It should also be noted that they had decorated the audience room particularly about the platform which was lovely with flowers and flags.

Aileen Garwood presided at the organ in the afternoon, and in the forenoon today, and Anna Cuppy did the same last evening and in the afternoon of today. Both young ladies do nicely.

Mrs. Garwood gave two or three selections on the organ last evening, and it was a pleasure to hear the enthusiastic compliments of the visiting delegates as well as our own people. And the big organ had its share of the good words. Such an instrument and such a player, were a revelation to many of the audience and they enjoyed it freely.

THURSDAY FORENOON

The devotional exercises were by Mrs. Wm. Curie of St. Joe and this was followed by a talk on the "Tenth" Legion. There were several other papers, assigned to Chas. Crise of Mt. Hope, Lottie Drake of LaOtto and Mrs. Kriebel of St. Joe, that we were not able to be present to hear. Frank Scholes of St. Joe gave an able paper on committee work. Edith Hall of Angola had a good paper on Monthly Business meetings, and Mr. Medbury took the place of Miss Edith Fay who was absent. Mr. Brosy had charge of the meeting, as Mr. Provines was obliged to go home, as he is in charge of a normal school.

French Sugar Bounty

The beauties of a sugar bounty are shown by the way it works in France where it has been given full swing. The bounty goes so far toward paying the cost of raising a crop that the sugar they sell to outside nations is put at a very low price, often far below cost, in order to undersell other nations. But they put on a big price at home, to their own countrymen from whose hard earned taxes, the bounty money comes. In this way it often happens that in England, the consumer pays but 4 cents a pound for his French sugar, while in France the consumer may be paying as high as 12 cents. Like a protective tariff, a bounty is a legalized swindle.

Fell Into the Lake.

Monday's Daily.

What might have proved a serious accident occured at Cold Springs landing on Hamilton lake last evening. As the crowd was preparing to take the steamer to return to Hamilton a sudden rush caused the wooden dock to collapse, throwing the entire party of people into about five feet of water. There was an exciting time for a few minutes, but luckily everybody got out safely with nothing worse than a thorough ducking. Some of the visitors were encumbered with lunch baskets and other picnic necessories and a good portion of the stuff was left to keep company with McGinty at the bottom of the lake.

HAD A RUNAWAY

Eugene Wyatt's team ran away Tuesday morning at his home in Jackson township. It is not known what started them, but they made a quick dash, with Mr. Wyatt's little boy Dale, 10 years old, in the wagon. He was thrown out and struck in such a way as to break his left arm just above the wrist. Dr. Carey, of Spencerville, was called out and set it, and the lad is getting on all right.

Eugene Girardot.

Justin Girardot received a letter yesterday from his daughter, Mrs. Bernie Trontman at Smithfield, Texas, in which she says her husband has gone into Mexico to get the body of Eugene Girardot, but she cannot say when anything will be done. The Mexican authorities are very particular, and as this is the season for yellow fevers and similar troubles, they may not allow him to be brought north at all. Mr. Girardot and the other relatives who have been called together here, can only wait for more news.

It appears that Eugene was not running his engine at the time of the accident, but was riding in the caboose of another train, and on his way to where he was to take his own engine and train. A freight ran into the rear end of the caboose, and he was injured in such a way that he died in about four hours.

His Life Was Saved.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says; "I was taken with Typhoid Fever, that ran into Pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave me great relief. I continued to use it, and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure for all Throat and Lung Trouble. Regular size 50 cents and $1. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's Drug Store! every bottle guaranteed.

Fallen Asleep.

Nancy Jane Ling was born in Fairfield township, DeKalb county, Ind., October 18, 1856, and died at the home of her parents in Hudson, Ind., June 12, 1899, aged 42 years, 7 months and 2 days.

On the 21st of April 1880, she was married to W. N. Shatto. To this union were born three children, one son and two daughters, all of whom are living. About ten years ago she gave her heart to God and united with the Evangelical church at County Line of which she remained a faithful member until her death. She leaves a husband, three children, a father and mother, a brother and a host of friends to mourn her departure. But their loss is her gain. She died rejoicing in the Savior's love.

The funeral was held in the church at Fairfield Center, and the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery of that place. Elder W. C. Bower, officiating.

The Convention.

Our closing items for the C. E. convention were crowded out yesterday, and we give them in brief now. Thursday evening James McDowell conducted the devotional exercises, and Mr. Arlen and Rev. C. S. Johnson of St. Joe, gave the talks. There was especially good singing and a sweet duet by Mr. Bottenberg and Mrs. John Kruger. C. E. Baxter should have credit for ability in leading the song service. The officers were elected in the afternoon and are: District secretary, Rev. C. S. Johnston; Supt., Mrs. Geedy of Kendallville. Each of the four counties has a secretary; for DeKalb, Edna Davis; Steuben, John Shuman; Noble, Frank Iddings; Lagrange, J. B. Hatfley. The executive committee are C. E. Baxter, O. H. Meek, Edna Clark, Jennie Simon and Jessie Baltz.

CIRCLING THE GLOBE

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World, Embracing Foreign Affairs and Home Happenings.

A Woman Killed by a Tramp.

Mrs. William Ropa, wife of the market master of Fort Wayne, met with a violent death, the result of an assault by a tramp.

At 8 o'clock Thursday morning Mrs. Ropa went to the barn in the rear of her house, to feed the chickens. Stretched out on the floor was a ragged tramp, who had probably made the place his bed during the night previous. He arose when Mrs. Ropa entered the barn and tried to pass her. The woman was frightened but grabbed the stranger, who caught her by the throat and choked her so badly that she died soon afterward.

The assault, which finally terminated fatally, has created much excitement and the officers are scouring the country in search of the murderer.

Robber Makes a Big Haul.

A sneak thief entered the Metropolitan National Bank at Boston, Mass., and stole $10,000 while the paying teller's attention was drawn away for a moment. The man entered the bank at about 11 o'clock a. m., and at the teller's window asked for some directions about sending a money order. The teller gave the information desired and the stranger stood at the counter, apparently making notes. Just then the teller was called to another part of the office and the visitor quickly thrust his arm through the grating of the window and took fifty $100 notes and five $1,000 notes. A young lady stenographer in the bank saw the man's action, but he escaped. He was apparently about 28 years old and well dressed.

Klondike Gold Field.

A letter from Dawson says the clean-up for the present season will amount to at least $18,000,000, more than twice last year's yield. The increase is due to the fact that Dominion, Sulphur and Hunker Creeks, which were practically unworked last season, have been developed to a considerable extent with favorable results, and the bench claims on Eldorado, Bonanza, Hunker and Dominion have been worked to such an extent that their output will greatly increase the total production. Gold Run, which is practically the only "new" creek in the district, has also shown up well. The portion of Dawson which was destroyed by fire April 21, is rapidly being rebuilt.

New French Cabinet.

The following composes the new French Cabinet: Senator Waldeck-Rousseau, President of the Council of Ministers and Minister of the Interior; M. Delcasse, Minister of Foreign Affairs; Gen. The Marquis De Gallifet, Minister of War; M. De Lanessan, Minister of Marine; M. Monis, Minister of Justice; M. Caillaux, Minister of Finance; M. Millerand, Minister of Commerce; M. Leygues, Minister of Public Instruction; M. Decras, Minister of the Colonies; M. Jean Dupuy, Minister of Agriculture.

German-Spanish Treaty Ratified.

Berlin special: The Reichstag has adopted by a great majority the treaty with Spain by which Germany acquires the Caroline Islands. The Socialists alone opposed it. Foreign Minister Von Buelow declared that the Americans valued the Carolines at $10,000,000, and said that Germany had a friendly understanding with the United States and Japan concerning acquisition of the islands.

Premature Explosion.

A crowd of boys at play in Lima, Ohio, erected a toy oil derrick fifteen feet high and proceeded to drill into the ground. After a depth of ten feet had been reached they decided to "shoot" the well in regular style, so they bought a quantity of powder, lowered it into the well, attached a fuse, when there was a premature explosion which killed Otto Hoffman and wounded several others.

Town Swept Away.

The old town of Carrizo, the county seat of Zapata County, Texas, between Laredo and Rio Grande City, on the Texas border, has been swept away by the Rio Grande flood. The town has a population of several hundred Mexicans of the poorer class. Their houses were adobes, which quickly melted away when the high water struck them.

Missionaries Not Murdered.

Hong Kong special: The report of the murder of three missionaries, the Rev. H. S. Phillips, his wife and Miss Seir, together with seven native converts, by a Chinese mob at Kien Yang, is contradicted.

Negro Lynched.

Daniel Patrick, the negro who assaulted Miss Bessie Ireland near Scranton, Miss., was lynched.

Dies in a Hotel.

The Eagle Hotel in Oswego, N. Y., was destroyed by fire. Mrs. Rachel King, an old lady, lost her life by suffocation, and eight others were seriously injured. The fire started in the kitchen and spread quickly. Several persons, including the proprietor and his wife, jumped from the windows of the second floor.

Tornado at Eaton.

A severe wind and thunder storm did considerable damage at Eaton, Ind. Will Smith's house was demolished and two frame buildings blown down.

Prisoner Killed by a Guard.

A military prisoner named Wringer, who was serving a two years' sentence in the Federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan., for desertion from the Sixteenth infantry, made a break for liberty and was shot and killed by Private Olson, Troop F, Sixth cavalry, who was on guard duty.

Gov. Scofield's Appeal.

Gov. Scofield of Wisconsin has sent out telegrams to the Mayors of thirty or forty cities asking them to renew their efforts to raise money for the storm-stricken people of New Richmond and vicinity. The Governor estimates it will take $500,000 to meet the requirements of the situation.

FIGHTING IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Supposed Friendly Filipinos Surprise American Troops.

Gen. Wheaton occupied Perez das Marinas Tuesday morning after moderately heavy fighting. Gen. Wheaton bivouacked in a field Monday night, and early in the morning advanced on the rebel stronghold of Perez das Marinas, near which place Monday the insurgents in force were so gallantly resisted by a small reconnoitering party under Maj. Bubb. Gen. Wheaton's advance was contested by the rebels, but after moderately heavy fighting the Americans occupied Perez das Marinas. After occupying the town, Gen. Wheaton examined the sanitation, which he decided was so bad as to make it dangerous to garrison the place. The rebels mutilated American dead. The bodies of two soldiers of the Fourth infantry, who fell in the running fight back of Imus, were left behind by their comrades. The bodies were afterward found with the right ears cut off, throats cut and slashes across the face.

An all-day battle between Gen. Wheaton's force and the insurgent army was fought near the city of Imus Monday. One battalion of the Fourth infantry, while reconnoitering, was attacked in the rear by a band of supposed friendly natives. The Americans stood their ground pluckily and were out of ammunition when Wheaton led a strong force to their help.

The insurgents fought well, taking advantage of the woods, and were driven back with difficulty. Little progress was made until late in the afternoon, when the native force was dislodged from a dense timber. The Americans lost five in dead and twenty-five in wounded. It is known that the Filipino loss was very heavy.

On effecting the capture of Perez das Marinas Maj. Bubb's battalion, composed of 300 men belonging to the Fourth infantry, was surrounded on all sides by the Filipinos, who were about 2,000 in number.

Nothing but the most determined bravery saved the Americans from being entirely wiped out. Maj. Bubb's battalion had been sent from Imus to take possession of Perez das Marinas. On arriving within two miles of the town the alcalde met them and formally surrendered the place. The houses along the road were filled with Filipinos of the friendly variety. These pretended to welcome the invaders. When within a short distance of Perez das Marinas Maj. Bubb discovered that the enemy had lines running parallel to the road and that his force was practically hedged in.

Gen. Wheaton was fired on in a road and had a narrow escape. Later the Third battalion was ordered to the front and formed on the Las Minas road. Finally the Americans secured a quantity of Filipino arms which had been abandoned in the woods. The scene of the fighting is over twenty miles from Manila.

Dr. George W. Chittenden, who died at Janesville, Wis., at the age of 79, was the oldest practicing physician in Wisconsin, and was widely known throughout the State.

Mrs. Mary P. Coats of Philadelphia celebrated her 102d birthday on Thursday. Her family was represented in every war from that of the revolution to the civil war, and it was a great source of grief to her that her sons were too old to enlist in the Spanish war.

The pallbearers at the funeral of Miss Mary Baterman, who died last week at the age of 70, were, in compliance with her particular request, all young bachelors. Miss Baterman was a resident for a long time previous to her death of the town of Sparkill, N. Y.

The death of Mrs. Julia A. Hedges, 98 years old, of senile decay, at Indianapolis, developed that her husband, who is still living, is 106 years old. Mr. Hedges still hears and talks readily, and he is physically quite active, but his memory is treacherous. Their only support is a pension on account of a son killed in the civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Hedges had lived together seventy years. Several of their children are still living.

Harrison Reed, whose death at Jacksonville, Fla., at the age of 86 years, is announced, was the first editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel, and was a member of the constitutional convention of Wisconsin. During the civil war he held an office in the Treasury Department, and at its close he moved to Jacksonville. In May, 1868, he was elected Governor of Florida, and served two terms, until January, 1873. In 1878 he was elected to the State Assembly for two years. Since then he had lived in retirement at his home in South Jacksonville.

ANGLO-VENEZUELAN DISPUTE.

Difficulty that Nearly Caused a Rupture with England.

Ex-President Harrison is in Paris representing Venezuela at an international tribunal of arbitration to settle the question which nearly caused a rupture between England and this country four years ago. Great Britain and Venezuela both claim the same territory along the border between Venezuela and British Guiana. Mr. Harrison is Venezuela's chief counsel. Having made a thorough investigation of all the claims involved, he has come to the conclusion that England has rights only in a narrow strip of land in the eastern part of the disputed territory. He will contend for the Venezuelan Government that the proper boundary line should be near the 59th parallel of latitude. Great Britain has claimed it to be westward of the 63d parallel, including several exceedingly rich gold mines.

BEN HARRISON.

It will be recalled that the United States took no stand as to what was the true boundary between the two states mentioned, but insisted simply that Great Britain submit to Venezuela's demand for arbitration on the subject. Great Britain refused and President Cleveland issued the memorable message which resulted in an American commission of investigation to determine the true boundary. The commission did not have to finish its work because, after a long correspondence between Lord Salisbury and Secretary of State Richard Olney, Great Britain finally consented to arbitration, and by a special treaty agreed with Venezuela to accept the decision of a given tribunal on the disputed territory.

The land in dispute is over 60,000 square miles in extent, greater than the areas of New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts combined. Venezuela lays claim to all the territory west of the Essequibo river.

Venezuela's claims are based on the rights acquired by Spain, of which country the present republic was, up to 1810, a dependency.

KAISER REFUSES TO YIELD.

Germany Will Never Accept the British Arbitration Plan.

Dr. Zorn, the German delegate, has returned to The Hague from Berlin, where he went to explain the arbitration proposals to Emperor William, without apparently having accomplished anything. It was hoped that the Kaiser would make concessions and agree to one of the plans now under discussion, but this now seems more improbable than ever.

The Hague dispatches say Dr. Zorn refuses to talk of the outcome of his mission, but advices from Berlin indicate that no change in German policy is likely. In fact, it is declared positively that the Emperor will never consent to the proposition of Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British envoy.

The representatives of the other great powers may go ahead with their work on the mediation tribunal, leaving Germany out, on the chance that, after it is approved by the leading nations of the world, the Berlin Government will decide to give it an indorsement.

CYCLONE SMASHER.

A Chicago Man Claims that He Can Head Them Off.

The invention of the "cyclone annihilator" is announced by E. D. Betts, a Chicago man. The device has been offered to the United States Government by the inventor. The annihilator is a small cannon with a weather vane and an air trigger. The weather vane is for the purpose of aiming the cannon, which rests upon a vertical pivot. When a cyclone approaches, the vane turns the cannon so it points directly at the funnel-shaped cloud. When the wind reaches a velocity of sixty-five miles an hour it will spring the trigger and fire the cannon. The projectile fired into the revolving cloud will throw it off its balance and it will scatter into a harmless zephyr.

Cyclone Not the Act of God.

In nine pulpits at Eau Claire, Wis., Sunday the cyclone at New Richmond was the subject of sermons. The general sentiment expressed was that it was a mysterious dispensation of Providence, but the Rev. Joseph Moran of the Episcopal Church said it was the devilish work of an unknown power and not the act of God.

News of Minor Note.

Another effort will be made to organize a pottery trust.

The Turner-Taylors and Lees threatened more bloodshed, Pinesville, Ky.

Fine buildings will take the place of the fire traps recently burned at Coney Island.

Capt. Rafferty of the Seventy-first New York, erroneously reported dying of yellow fever, is at work in Trinidad.

IN TENTS AND CELLARS.

Herman's Homeless Citizens Fed and Housed by Charity.

Five hundred homeless citizens of Herman, Neb., are leading a very primitive existence in the devastated place. At night they crawl into tents provided by the good people of the State, or burrow into the cellars of their wretched homes like so many rats. The picture is a most distressing one. At meal times they crowd around the church, the only remaining structure, which is used as a morgue, hospital, relief depot and telegraph and reportorial office for the correspondents. The property damage is $200,000, with practically no insurance. A special police force of thirty men was necessary to discourage vandalism. The place was being denuded even of the broken and dilapidated household goods. No one pretends to be able to pick out his property. It is all thrown into one great pile, which covers several acres. But it is practically valueless. The twister formed from a mass of fleecy clouds in Dane valley, half a mile from Herman. The vapor-like mass suddenly seemed to turn black as ink, and with a roar like a thousand railroad engines traveling up a grade started down the valley, beating into splinters everything it touched. It seemed to churn the very earth.

The freaks of the great black ball were numerous. Anderson Hopkins was blown through the side of his barn, and the kitchen stove, in which a fire was burning, followed him. The debris was ignited and the farmer burned to death. Farmer Lennox saw it coming and got his family into a storm cellar, but he was carried high in the air and hung up in the branches of a tree. Later a horse passed through the air like a cannon ball and dislodged the farmer. A party of traveling men took refuge in the cellar of the hotel at the village. The hotel was swept away and a struggling horse was suddenly deposited in the midst of the frightened commercial men. The animal began to rear and plunge, and the drummers, as a matter of self-preservation, threw the animal to the ground by main force and sat upon him until the cyclone had passed.

Maj. Burdick, being asked what the relief committee should send in, as indicating the extent of the devastation, remarked: "We need anything and everything required by a well-regulated family, except kindling wood." Had it not been for the farmers of the surrounding country, who came into the village with supplies, the people would have starved. Vistors crowded the village by the thousands, and what little had been sent in they helped eat. The people have not only to be fed but clothed. Relief is being furnished by all Nebraska and Iowa.

NATURAL GAS GONE.

Ohio Pipe Lines Costing Millions Now Only Old Junk.

A Findlay, Ohio dispatch says: This year will witness the passing of natural gas as fuel in northwestern Ohio. The mighty systems of pipe lines which carried gas to Toledo, Tiffin, Sandusky, Norwalk and many smaller places, are being abandoned and the pipes taken up. The pump stations of the Northwestern Natural Gas Company, the Standard's representative in the gas business, are shut down for good, as are those of the city of Toledo, which invested a million and a half in the effort to give its people a cheap fuel, and now has only the old junk to show for its money. Even in this place, the "city of natural gas," there is not enough pressure left to supply the wants for domestic fuel, and in the cool days of May housewives were compelled to use wood to keep their cook stoves going. Yet it is but a few years since gas seemed to be as free and permanent as air, and one had only to punch a hole a matter of a thousand feet into the earth to secure a seemingly inexhaustible supply. The waste of this fuel in the early days of its discovery was one of the greatest mistakes in the world's industrial history. Ten years ago the capacity of the wells in the Findlay field was about 200,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day and to-day this is diminished to a few millions, with the pressure so low as to be of but little service.

BELLAMY STORER.

New Minister Takes Up Uncle Sam's Work in Madrid.

Bellamy Storer, the new United States minister to Spain, was presented at court Friday afternoon. Felicitous addresses were made in which the hope was mutually expressed that the pleasant relations existing between Spain and the United States prior to the war would be renewed and continue indefinitely.

STORER.

BIG CROPS IN ALL LANDS.

This Condition Tends to Decrease the Exports of America.

Good crops in all the world in the year 1898-99 will probably make our export figures for the fiscal year about to end a few million dollars less than those of the banner year 1898. For the eleven months of the fiscal year 1899 the total exports are $1,130,629,572, while in no earlier year except 1898 did the total exports of the eleven months reach the billion dollar line. The reduction in exportation is entirely in agricultural products, and, indeed, the total exports of farm products of agriculture are nearly $50,000,000 less than those of last year.

In 1898 the crops in all parts of the world except the United States were unusually light, and as a consequence the prices realized for farm products exported were much higher than the average for many years, while in 1899, with good crops abroad, the prices which our exporters of farm products are receiving are materially lower than those of last year, though in quantity the exports of agricultural products are in most cases as great as those of 1898.

One curious feature in the reduction of our exportations relates to live cattle, in which the exportations of the year are 25 per cent below those of the corresponding months of 1898, the total for eleven months being $24,484,823, against $32,352,833 last year.

CURRENT COMMENT

The election of a Western man for Speaker of the House of Representatives is regarded in New York as a serious blow to the East. By thoughtful politicians it is looked upon as the beginning of the end of Eastern control in national affairs. Numerically the East is stronger at the present time in Congress than it will ever be again, in all probability. The next census, which will be taken a year from now, will increase the Western representation in the lower branch of Congress at the expense of the East and South and will give the Middle and Western States more power than was ever before centered in that part of the country. The foreshadowed election of Gen. Henderson is therefore looked upon as something of a calamity by those whose line of vision focuses about New York and Boston.

The experts at Washington are inclined to think that the public is apt to grossly overestimate the population, not only of individual cities but of the country as a whole. Assistant Superintendent Wines estimates that the national census to be taken in 1900 will show 77,000,000 people, a gain of 15,000,000 in ten years. Two other experts who have made careful calculations based on the growth of the country during previous decades, agree with him. At the same rate of increase the population of the United States in 1950 will be 190,000.

One argument which should appeal strongly to the conference at The Hague is the fact that almost every nation, with the exception of Great Britain and the United States, is overtaxed to meet the expenses of maintaining its army and navy. France runs behind to the amount of $100,000,000; Austria has an annual deficit of $80,000,000; Russia of $50,000,000, and Italy of $30,000,000. The smaller powers are, many of them, in a state bordering on bankruptcy.

During the last fifteen months the entire expense of maintaining the army and navy of the United States has been $366,000,000. Of this amount the army has absorbed $269,000,000 and the navy $97,000,000. In times of peace the cost of the army and navy is approximately $112,000,000. Since September, 1898, the expense of the naval and military establishment has grown steadily smaller.

The first case of yellow fever for the year is reported from New Orleans. Last year the disease existed in Louisiana and Mississippi from July 1 to Sept. 29. In New Orleans there were in all but twelve cases. In Franklin, La., there were 106 cases, with but five deaths. In Taylor, Miss., there were eighty-two cases, eight of which resulted fatally.

A cargo of shells, originally intended for the use of Spanish guns in the war with the United States, recently arrived at Glasgow, Scotland. The charges had been extracted from them and needy Spain took advantage of the recent rise in the price of metal to get hold of an honest penny by selling them for old iron.

Ten years ago the city of Johnstown, Pa., was entirely destroyed by a great flood. Six thousand lives were lost, 1,800 houses were swept away, and property valued at $15,000,000 was destroyed.

MOB ATTACKS CAR BARNS.

Cleveland Strikers Seek to Destroy Much Valuable Property.

Mob rule held sway on the south side in Cleveland, Ohio, Tuesday night for more than an hour. A mob of 5,000 persons attacked the Holmden avenue car barns of the Cleveland Electric Railway Company and rushed through the yard, which contained sixty cars, destroying everything in sight until driven out by the police. The mob succeeded in wrecking ten cars before being compelled to retire. Heavy timbers were driven through windows and woodwork, stones and clubs were used until the cars were completely demolished.

The mob had a double purpose in view; its intention was to injure as much as possible property belonging to the Big Consolidated Company and to do bodily harm to the twenty-five non-union men living at the barns. In the first it was successful, but in the second it was not, owing to the arrival of the police.

The first outbreak took place at Wilson avenue and Quincy street. Obstructions had been placed on the track and Motorman Webster left his car to remove them. One hundred men then began to stone him and the conductor of the car, while the passengers rushed out pell-mell. The motorman stood his ground. A rioter ran in front of him and threw a brick, whereupon Webster drew his revolver and fired, but missed his assailant. Other attacks were made on him, but after he had fired several shots the crowd retreated. One man received a bullet in his foot. The police then arrived.

Mayor Farley issued a proclamation at noon calling for peace and order, and declaring that order would be restored even if he had to resort to desperate methods. The special committee of the City Council appointed to bring about a settlement, if possible, convened in the forenoon. Officials of the Big Consolidated and a committee from the strikers were present, and each side of the case was heard. The strikers presented their demands in writing. They are greatly modified as compared with the original ones, several concessions being made.

Four hundred employes of the Cleveland Foundry Company struck in the afternoon because the company refused to discharge a man who had ridden on a Big Consolidated car. The man was a foreman. When it became known that he had ridden on a car the molders went to the officers of the company and demanded his discharge. The officers refused to comply with the demand and all the men walked out of the works. This is the first strike in the nature of a sympathy demonstration that has taken place.

DETECT BOLD MAIL THEFT.

Wholesale Robbery of Sacks Discovered by Chicago Authorities.

What is regarded by Postoffice Inspector James Stuart as one of the largest and boldest mail robberies in the history of the Chicago postoffice was detected Tuesday, and the arrests of Walter Porter and John Newman, drivers of mail wagons at the postoffice, followed. Porter made a full confession of the crime and implicated Newman. After a brief hearing before United States Commissioner Humphrey the men were bound over to the Federal grand jury. Porter's bonds were fixed at $10,000 and Newman's at $5,000, and in lieu of bail both men were taken to jail.

A large amount of the letters, money orders and packages taken by the men was found in their lodging house. In the collection were letters, money orders and checks directed to all parts of the country and Europe. One check found in the pile was for $20,000.

The fact that the robbers had been in the employ of the Chicago postoffice since June 1 and that all the thefts were committed after that time while the prisoners were driving their wagons makes the scheme one of the boldest in the recollection of the postoffice inspectors. The mail was all taken in pouches while being carried in the wagons from the postoffice to the railroad stations and back, and it has been admitted that three sacks were taken in one day.

MINERS SHED BLOOD.

Evansville Strikers Fire On Imported Negroes.

The coal miners' strike at Evansville, Ind., assumed a serious aspect Wednesday morning. Operators of the Sunnyside mine had imported thirty negro miners from Kentucky and were delivering them at the mine at 1:30 a. m., when unknown parties concealed in bushes near the mine opened fire on the negroes. It was very dark and a stampede followed. Some of the non-union men responded with revolvers, and many shots were fired. Six men were badly wounded. James Moore, bookkeeper and a stockholder in the mine, was shot in the back, and is likely to die. Henry Smith and John Phillips, both colored, were probably fatally shot. Ed Geiger, son of a local merchant; Charles Smith, colored, and John Horseweather, colored, were each badly wounded.

STANDARD OIL QUITS OHIO.

Great Trust Will Establish Offices in New York.

The Standard Oil Company will remove its headquarters from Cleveland, which will hereafter become a branch distributing point. When the dispatches announced recently that the Standard Oil Company had become a New Jersey corporation, with a capital of $10,000,000, it was said that the headquarters would be removed to New York, but it was not thought that the company would withdraw from Ohio entirely.

For several months Attorney General Monnett has been making war upon the Standard Oil Company of Ohio and the Buckeye Pipe Line Company, an allied corporation.

AMERICAN GIFT TO DREYFUS.

Hebrew Dime Subscription to Purchase Testimonials.

The Hebrews of America are planning a testimonial to celebrate the release of Dreyfus from Devil's Island, and the tardy measure of justice to him meted out by the French nation. Funds are being raised in Chicago, New York and all the large cities of the country. It is intended to present to Captain Dreyfus a gold-mounted and diamond-set and richly engraved sword. To Emile Zola, whose defense of the army officer led to his exile from his native country, will be given a solid gold pen, neatly engraved. To Col. Picquart, who always stood by the prisoner, will be presented a gold loving cup, with a richly engraved inscription.

SCHLEY TO ASK FOR INQUIRY.

Admiral's Conduct at Santiago Will Be Looked Into.

Naval officers believe that a court of inquiry should be appointed to ascertain definitely Rear Admiral Schley's conduct in the naval battle off Santiago. The statements of Lieutenant Commanders Hodgson and Hellner have reopened the controversy, and in the opinion of many naval officers brings the case "up to Schley." Secretary Long may order an inquiry, but the rear admiral's friends believe he will ask for one.

"THE TOUCH OF A VANISHED HAND."

We sigh for the touch of a vanished hand—
The hand of a friend most dear,
Who has passed from our side to the shadowy land,—
But, what of the hand that is near?

To the living's touch is the soul inert
That weeps o'er the silent urn?
For the love that lives is our hand alert
To make some sweet return?

Do we answer back in a fretful tone,
When life's duties press us sore?
Is our praise as full as if they were gone,
And could hear our praise no more?

As the days go by, are our hands more swift
For a trifle beyond their share,
Than to grasp—for a kindly helpful lift—
The burden some one must bear?

We sigh for the touch of a vanished hand,
And we think ourselves sincere;
But, what of the friends that about us stand,
And the touch of the hand that's here?

THE SANDALWOOD BRACELET

Miss Considine was the rage that season; a tall, haughty looking girl, with magnificent great dark eyes, and a torrent of dead black hair, which she was always contriving to wear as nobody else did, tumbling over her shoulders cloudily or wreathed about her small, elegantly shaped head.

She was a stranger in the town, but she brought letters of introduction from people of the highest respectability in the metropolis, and was accompanied by a staid-looking lady of middle age, who always wore pearl-colored silk and performed chaperon nightly in an altogether irreproachable manner.

Miss Considine's toilets were artistic perfection. Her laces were priceless, said judges; her jewelry dazzled the eyes of even accustomed upperdom.

Miss Considine was a mystery, and the greater sensation, perhaps, for that very chill whisper which seemed to thrill in the air about her, and which had its foundation in the mere fading of the beauty's brilliant color, the flicker of her liquid glance at unexpected moments, and for no apparent reason.

She was a coquette of the first water. That was a discovery early made. She had a way of looking sidewise through those long, silky lashes of hers that was infinitely more alluring than a level glance would have been, and the smile which visited those rosy lips only now and then was doubly attractive from its infrequency.

A creature of dangerous graces, she was what people mean when they call a woman fatal. Men imagined heaven in her glance, and counted that lost when her smile was withdrawn.

My Lady Dangerous met her match, however, toward the close of the season. A yellow-haired German, whose azure glance had a softer dazzle than her own, and who called himself by the fascinating title of Count Ludwig Vermandorf, presented himself about that time to compete with the beautiful girl for her place as sensation of the day.

He was shy of Miss Considine at first, but gradually he too seemed to be drawn within the circle of her wiles, yielding with such a reluctant, pensive grace as clad his radiant face with a new charm. Even Miss Considine drooped her dangerous eyes with a flickering blush under the tender brilliance of the count's smile, and her fingers trembled in his clasp, instead of resenting the fond, faint pressure of his hand. Count Ludwig Vermandorf was an assiduous wooer. Never devotee knelt at the shrine of his patron saint with more rapt and untiring devotion than he at the feet of Miss Considine.

It was not new to the coquettish beauty to be sought humbly. But this man was her master, even at her own game.

He knew how to clothe his most impassioned moment with a reserve that continually mocked and tantalized; to say one thing, and look another, to sting with a word and soothe with a touch. He never said too much, but always too little. His looks were eloquent of love; his tongue so silent on that fascinating theme, that the heart of the haughty beauty began to fairly writhe within her with mingled pain and anger.

Count Ludwig was an artist of some talent, and he insisted that he must paint Miss Considine's portrait. She was not at all loath, though she feigned reluctance when it was first spoken of.

These sittings, from which she had hoped much, and for which she draped her perfect shape with every artistic combination her rare taste could devise, proved utter failures as far as her object was concerned.

Whether it was the same with Count Ludwig remains to be seen. He would permit no one, not even the beautiful subject, to look upon his picture while it remained incomplete.

Miss Considine, since her acquaintance with the fascinating count, had changed strangely. All that rich tropical bloom, peculiarly hers, had vanished. Instead was a dusky pallor, varied by fitful crimson flashes, like the leap of a smoldering flame. Count Ludwig had changed also. The soft radiance of his handsome face had turned to the chill dazzle of the snow peaks. His smile was like the ice beneath. His blue eyes were like steel magnets.

It was as though from this man emanated some deadly creeping influence which Miss Considine cowered before, but could not resist. It was scarcely lover and loved one. It seemed rather the executioner and his victim.

One night Miss Considine invited a select few to witness the mysterious unveiling of the picture about which there had been such conjecture. A sensation was expected. The magnificent drawing-room was ablaze with light, a-flutter with expectant guests. The veiled portrait occupied a prominent position at the lower end of the long salon, and thither pressed the throng, the peerless belle conspicuous upon the arm of the artist, Count Ludwig.

Both were pale, but the count smiled right and left, dazzling. The beauty was grave and silent, watching the man upon whose arm she leaned furtively, and with a half-foreboding look in her liquid black eyes. From time to time she pressed one jewelled hand stealthily upon her side, as if to still the throbbing of the stormy heart beneath, while she continually questioned herself:

"Why do I fear? What is this terror that steals my very senses from me? He cannot know."

At last Count Ludwig loosened her jeweled fingers from his arm, and stepping forward, drew the curtain with a sweep of his hand.

There was an instant's breathless silence. An affrighted amaze seemed to stop the beating of every heart. Then broke forth exclamation and outcry, and above all, like the death scream of some dying animal, rose a woman's shriek.

The picture was, first, a room, rich in decorations of green and gold. In the foreground, half reclined in a cushioned chair, an old man, with long, softly curling white hair. His head had fallen a little to one side, his eyes were fixed in a glassy, yet reproachful stare upon the exquisitely beautiful face of a woman, whose jeweled hands he grasped with a dying clutch. Both his hands and hers were blood-stained. Hers held a stiletto-like dagger from whose glittering point also blood dripped. There was a gaping wound in the old man's side, and the woman's face was that of Miss Considine.

When the appalled woman, for whose sole benefit this picture had been painted, would have flung up her frenzied hands to shut out the sight, Count Ludwig caught them in an iron grasp, and almost shouted in her ear in his excitement.

"No, no, madam; you shall look, and look, and look, till the sight blinds you or kills you. I care not which. Do you see him, false siren—the poor old man, who was kind to you—who took you out of poverty to marry you—who never harmed the most helpless creature? What had he done that you should kill him, you murderess?"

Miss Considine had ceased to struggle. The blanched whiteness of her face and the startling eyes were something awful to see, and the screams that broke through her rigid, ashen lips, curdled the blood to the heart.

"Shall I tell you who I am?" Count Ludwig continued, without releasing her, still compelling her to look. "Count Ludwig no longer. I am his son—that Rudolphus of whom you have heard, but whom you never saw. When I came home and found that the poor old man who loved me had been ruthlessly slain, I swore never to rest until I had found and given to justice his murderess. For, madam, I never doubted a single instant who she was. You laid your plans well. You married a doting old man for his wealth, and with your sorceress designings you induced him to disown his own children and make a will which gave you all. Then you contrived that he should send the servants for a holiday, except that valet, who was hanged for the murder. Poor old George! He would have died sooner than harm his master. You pretended to quit the house yourself. But you came back in disguise and did the deed."

He paused. Miss Considine had not uttered a sound for some moments. The horrible ghastliness had not left her face, but she had in a measure recovered her self-possession. Now she spoke in an utterly changed but composed tone.

"You cannot prove a syllable of this mad story," she began, but he stopped her, with eyes that seemed absolutely to blaze with rage and menace. Drawing swiftly forth a purple velvet case, he lifted the lid and showed upon the white satin cushion an exquisitely wrought sandalwood bracelet. It was stained with something which had dried upon it, and changed its color, all except about a third, to a dark, sickly shade, whose hue it was not difficult to recognize.

Said Count Ludwig in an awed tone:

"I found this among the cushions of the chair in which my father was slain. It is his blood upon it. It slipped from your arm in your struggle with him. You wear its mate this moment upon your arm."

He held his ensanguined token an instant beside the one on this woman's bare, exquisitely molded arm. As the guilty woman fainted Rodolphus caught her falling form. Then he laid her slowly down upon the carpet and drew back. She never stirred.

"I think she is dead," he said quietly.

It was true. Some vessel had burst inwardly in that wild struggle against the shock of knowing that the man she had learned to love was the son of her unhappy victim. She had been dying while he spoke to her.

She Knew His Footsteps.

They are telling a story up on the West Side—which may or may not be true—about a rising young politician who has unusually large feet. His mother is a lovable old woman and quite deaf. She lives in a flat in the neighborhood of Grant's tomb, and is always delighted by a visit from her son. When the United States cruiser Brooklyn, which was anchored in the Hudson, off the tomb, fired a salute of twenty-one guns, the old lady was observed to start, fix her cap and smooth down her apron. Then she said, with a sweet smile: "George is coming; I hear his footsteps on the stairs."—New York Tribune.

Burying the Dead in Porto Rico.

The Porto Rican way of burying the dead is curious. A coffin is rented for the corpse to be carried to the cemetery. Two or four natives carry it on their heads or fastened to two bamboo poles. The corpse is taken out of the coffin and buried about two feet. If the rent for the burial lot is not paid within a certain time the body is dug up and thrown away.

What You Learn by Sickness.

"You learn a good many things through a long and dangerous illness," mused Browne, who had not been sick.

"Yes," responded Smithe, who had. "And the most notable is the fact nourishing food is invariably something you don't want to eat."—Wasp.

JUST seventy years ago something in the nature of a "boom" struck Chicago, gave it a start towards the great metropolis it has become. Before that, its history was practically that of a frontier village, a trading point. In 1830 a canal connecting the Illinois River with Lake Michigan was under consideration. Congress set apart land to aid the project. A portion of the allotment fell within the limits of Chicago. An auction sale was made, the lots bringing an average of $34. Deals in the same became brisk. A "boom" was started, settlers came in, Chicago began to make metropolitan history, and the years since then have been simply forward strides of majestic progress.

CHICAGO IN 1830 FROM THE LAKE.

It is pleasant and interesting to note what occurred to bring all this about prior to 1830. The first permanent settlement was made in 1803, when a sturdy Scotch-American named Kinzie followed in the tracks of French missionaries and explorers, and took possession of a rude squared hut, erected by a San Domingan negro named Jean Baptiste, who had drifted into the northwest twenty-six years previous. Kinzie established an Indian trading post, and as the pioneer merchant and business man laid the foundations of the greatest commercial city in the West. The government at once built Fort Dearborn, and here arriving visitors and settlers sought protection, and the Indians exchanged skins and pelts for trinkets, general merchandise and whisky. In 1812 the savages practically destroyed the fort, and massacred fifty-two persons. In 1816 it was rebuilt. Within the next ten years churches, ferries, stores, hotels of a primitive character appeared on the scene, and the settlement became a town. Nearly all the new arrivals came to start in business. Competition became an immediate element, and as early as 1825 there was evident that keenness and foresight which made commerce the keynote of one of the greatest manufacturing and distributing cities in the world. In 1820 the government rewarded a resident for services rendered in negotiating peaceful relations with the Pottawattomies by building for him free the first frame house erected in the district. Chicago's most lordly cloud-grazer does not to-day attract such universal attention as did the owner of this princely structure. Up to that time everything was imported, and some idea of the progress attained during the past seventy years may be gleaned from the circumstance that the clapboards, sash, nails and brick used in constructing this modest little house were all brought from Cleveland, then a much larger city than Chicago. Four years later the first bridges across the river were constructed—one of these was made of floating logs tied together, and the Indians in its vicinity voluntarily contributed one-half of its cost, which was in the neighborhood of $400.

FIRST COURTHOUSE, 1832.

NEW GOVERNMENT BUILDING.

The Sauganash was the grand hotel in those early days. Here a half-breed kept a tavern, now within the memory of many a living patriarch of the West. He was the town's great musician, and just as Nero fiddled while Rome burned, he played for his guests while Chicago grew up. It is related that in those days such things as white sheets and table linen were a rare commodity, and that after a guest was asleep the specious landlord would invade his room with a hideous yell, suggesting "Indians!" whip away the sheet from the frightened stranger—who would prudently burrow in the blankets—while the trophy was smoothed out to do service as a table-cloth.

SECOND COURTHOUSE.

Began to "Feel Its Oats."

By 1836 the "Garden City" began "to feel its oats!" The first vessel built in Chicago was successfully launched, and ground was broken for the long talked-of Illinois and Michigan Canal. The Galena railroad was chartered. Speculation became rife, and real estate reached figures that discounted the wildest previous speculations. Chicago was now the largest town in the State, the question of incorporation was constantly agitated, and in the following year a charter was secured from the Legislature. The population had risen to 4,180 souls, there were 4 warehouses, 398 dwellings, 29 dry goods stores, 5 hardware stores, 19 groceries, 17 lawyers' offices, and 5 churches.

The young city, organized and ready for business, prepared for an immediate influx of population and wealth, but was doomed to suffer serious disappointment. A great panic presented itself, and waves of disaster and collapse swept over the entire land, from which Chicago suffered in common with other cities. A passion for investment had carried the people away, and a lack of money now led to no end of business failures. "Hard Times" held the city in its grasp. Retrenchment was necessitated, and 1838 followed gloomy as a continuous funeral. A severe drouth and a most serious epidemic visited the city. Amid this gloom the first theater was built. Strange to say, it was a success and was patronized by many who were unable to pay their debts.

For fully ten years the effects of the panic acted as a caution upon citizens. Legitimate trade was nurtured, and the marine interests of the city slowly built up. Newspapers were started, municipal buildings erected. In 1848 the Pioneer, a locomotive, arrived on a brig from the East, and pulled the first train out of Chicago over the Galena road. On Nov. 20 of that year the first wheat ever transported by rail arrived, and the locomotive began to make regular trips over the ten miles of the road then completed. From this insignificant beginning the most magnificent railway system in the world has been built up in half a century. It was the railroads that made Chicago the metropolis of the West, and it is the railroads that will ever keep the city in front, each new tributary line adding to its greatness. In the same year the canal was completed, and a board of trade was organized, with a total membership of eighty-two.

Some City Improvements.

Gas came to Chicago in 1850, and the Illinois Central Railroad began to plan out its line. In the following year the drinking water system of the city was put on a progressive basis, obviating the buying of small quantities from two-wheeled carts, which dispensed the same at the rate of from 5 to 10 cents a barrel. The rule now seemed to be the organization of a new railroad company about every two years. The Fort Wayne, the Michigan Southern, the Burlington and Quincy, the Alton, and numerous other lines sprang into being, but only at the behest of careful capital and hard, energetic labor. Some idea of the way these roads were built up may be gained from the fact that the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad of the present day consists of a consolidation of no less than forty-five separate and distinct lines. By 1855 eleven trunk lines centered at Chicago. In 1857 panic again struck Chicago, and a great many banks failed. During this year Chicago's first great fire occurred, thirteen persons losing their lives in the conflagration.

Two years later the first street railway made its appearance—a single-track affair, quite primeval. A strong disposition was now evinced "to lift Chicago out of the mud," and paving was the order of the day. Now the city began to be the center of important political events. It was in the Chicago Wigwam that Lincoln and Hamlin were nominated, and at the same structure many momentous war meetings were held. The city became the recognized center of the West. Its progress was now all along the line of rapid advancement, balked only by the great fire of 1871, a conflagration overshadowing any in the history of the world. Then came the years of reorganization and rebuilding. With 1890 the prospering metropolis had reached the 1,000,000 mark. The most imposing structures in the world were designed and constructed. The year 1893 saw the World's Fair open and close, after scoring a brilliant success. Great crowds came to view the city for the first time from all quarters of the world, enormously swelling the already great population of the city. Electricity was advanced in its highest form in all the industries. Mechanics of every class here found the ideal field for progress. The social, literary and commercial interests had reached the highest typical plane. The city entered 1899 with a marvelous history behind it. The wonderful metropolis not only astonished the world, but surprised its own people.

VIEW ON CLARK STREET, 1857.

Is To-day a Wonder.

To-day Chicago is a wonder to survey. Its vast area, immense population, magnificent buildings and enormous industries are known to and appreciated by all. The city comprises in its limits about 190 square miles of territory. It is twenty-five and one-half miles from its extreme north to its extreme south limit.

From absolutely nothing to a city of 2,000,000 people within the narrow limits of a single century, it has come to lead the world in many things—as a railway center, port, lumber market, grain market. In live stock of all kinds Chicago takes the preference. All this is not the result of chance or fortune. Good luck seldom has a run of sixty-one years. Chicago's present and prospective greatness rests upon her location at the gateway of a fertile country as large in extent as Europe. All outside territory has been tributary and helpful to Chicago, and the Iowa farmer, the Michigan miner, the Indiana merchant, the Wisconsin lumberman, have all helped to build up the metropolis in a way. A century ago the advantages Chicago utilized were counted trivial, but close application and shrewd enterprise have annihilated distance, bridged rivers, and tumbled mountains, until, for all practical purposes, Salt Lake City is nearer to Chicago than Boston was to Philadelphia the year Fort Dearborn was built.

STATE STREET,—1899.

AN OBSTINATE ARTIST.

He Painted a Red Ear on the Baron de Rothschild.

"A portrait painter can't afford to be entirely independent unless he has a tremendous vogue," remarked an artist who has spent a number of years in study abroad to a correspondent of the New Orleans Times-Democrat. "I remember when I first went to Paris, Sergeant, who is probably the greatest master in his special field that America has ever produced, was just beginning to attract attention. He had painted a portrait of his preceptor, Durow, that was generally applauded, and the stir it created led to his getting a commission from the Baron Rothschild. It was his first big job, but he went about it with exactly the same nonchalance that characterizes him at present. During the last sitting, when the picture was receiving its finishing touches, it chanced that one of the Baron's ears became unusually red, a circumstance probably due to the heat of the room. Sergeant seized on it at once as a good bit of color and made the painted ear redder, if anything, than the original. When Rothschild inspected the portrait he was greatly pleased. 'But of course,' he said, 'you will tone down that left ear.' 'Oh, no!' replied the painter promptly. 'I think I shall leave it just as it is. I rather like that red.' The banker was astonished and very angry, and while he paid for the canvas he never hung it. Of course, the incident raised a laugh and the artist's obstinacy was admired in bohemia, but it really did Sergeant a great deal of harm, and was one of the things that eventually determined him to move to London."

Carving Done by Kernels.

There is a curiously carved frame around a picture recently hung in the office of the Pendleton, Ore., board of fire commissioners by Secretary Weidler. It is made of a board of Oregon fir, but the carving, which in places is nearly through the board, is of such a queer pattern and in such a strange and peculiar style that no one who sees it can imagine how it was done. The nearest guess anyone makes is that it is Japanese work. The fact is, the board was part of a grain chute, and the quaint and curious carving as well as the polishing was done by kernels of wheat passing down the chute. Just why the wheat cut such curious curves is difficult to imagine, as the wood does not appear to be any softer where the cuts are deepest.—San Francisco Examiner.

Victoria's Income.

From the time that she was crowned, Queen Victoria has been in receipt of an income from the Government amounting to about $3,000,000 a year.

From this she pays all the expenses and salaries of her household, charities, pensions and other charges imposed upon the sovereign, be they more or less.

She has $300,000 per annum for pocket money, of which no account is ever asked.

The salaries of her household amount to about $600,000, and the other expenses to about $750,000 per year; $60,000 is given her for "bounties and alms," and $96,000 for annuities and pensions.

In addition to this, the other members of the royal family receive annuities amounting to $865,000.

From the Duchy of Lancaster the Queen receives about $450,000 a year, which she has no need to touch at all, and probably invests in bulk as fast as it comes to her. This income of itself since she has been upon the throne, with interest, would aggregate $40,000,000.—Philadelphia Press.

The Great Pyramid of Cheops.

The great pyramid of Cheops is the largest structure ever erected by the hand of man. Its original dimensions at the base were 764 feet square, and its perpendicular height in the highest point 448 feet. It covers four acres, one rood, and twenty-two rods of ground, and has been estimated by an eminent British architect to have cost not less than $165,000,000.

Mosquito Bite Pain.

The pain of a mosquito bite is caused by a fluid poison injected by the insect into the wound in order to make the blood thin enough to float through the mosquito's throat.

FAMOUS RAILROAD MAN.

Frank Thomson, the Late President of the Pennsylvania System.

The death of Frank Thompson, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, which occurred at his home, Merion, near Philadelphia, a short while ago, removed the foremost railroad man in this country. For forty-one years he was in the employ of the Pennsylvania road and by his own ability rose through all the grades to the highest position in that big corporation.

Frank Thomson was born in Chambersburg, Pa., of good Scotch family, 58 years ago. His father was a well-known jurist and had represented his district in Congress. Young Thomson received an academic education and at 17 he entered the Altoona shops of the Pennsylvania Railroad, where he acquired a perfect knowledge of railroading in its different branches, even to the building of an engine and running the same after it was finished. Colonel Thomas Scott, then General Superintendent of the road, perceived in the young man evidences of rare ability. Colonel Scott was about this time appointed by President Lincoln Assistant Secretary of War, with charge of all matter relating to the transportation of troops and supplies. He called Frank Thomson to his aid as chief assistant, although the latter was not yet 20. Young Thomson took the field immediately, the scene of his operations being the South and the upper Southwest, where he constructed railroads and bridges, repaired those which had been injured by the exigencies of war and directed the transportation of troops. He achieved many notable feats in getting wrecked roads and dismantled rolling stock into working order and was in many ways responsible for the brilliant success of Colonel Scott's department.

FRANK THOMSON.

After the war, when not yet 25, he was appointed Superintendent of the eastern division of the Philadelphia and Erie road, of the Pennsylvania system, which position he filled for nine years. Step by step he advanced, until in 1882 he became Second Vice President, First Vice President in 1888 and President in February, 1897, on the death of George B. Roberts.

Mr. Thomson was in close touch with all the railway interests of the country. He made of the Pennsylvania road a model system. Marvelous executive ability and power to judge the capacity of men about him were his chief characteristics. In temperament and manner he was exceedingly calm and amiable. He had the qualities which make the successful diplomat to an abundant degree. No one ever saw him ruffled or excited. In private life he was a singularly attractive man. He was a patron of art, literature and music and a lover of outdoor sports. The social side of his nature was well developed and some of the most eminent personages in this country and abroad have enjoyed his warm hospitality. Up to a short time before his death he enjoyed excellent health, due to his out door exercise.

A REMARKABLE HORSE.

Has a Sixteen-Foot Tail and a Mane Eleven Feet Long.

This picture represents a remarkable growth of mane and tail on a horse. His name is Linus II. and he is the son of Linus, a celebrated horse in his day. No picture can do adequate justice to his great beauty, for he has a double mane which sweeps the ground on both sides, and a tail which trails far in the rear. The mane is very thick and measures 11 feet in length. The tail is even more remarkable than the mane, measuring 16 feet from tip to tip. It is, of course, impossible to account for this remarkable freak of nature, and while there are undoubtedly other cases of similar abnormal growth on record we do not know of any horse which has been so bountifully blessed with such a beautiful growth of hair.

A REMARKABLE HORSE.

Curious Ads. of London.

Curiously worded advertisements that are funny without intent are common in the London papers. Here are a few examples:

"Furnished apartments suitable for a gentleman with folding doors."

"Wanted, a room by two gentlemen about thirty feet long and twenty feet broad."

"Lost, a collie dog by a man on Saturday answering to Jim with a brass collar round his neck and muzzle."

"Boy wanted who can open oysters with references."

"Bulldog for sale; will eat anything; very fond of children."

"Wanted, an organist and a boy to blow the same."

"Wanted, a boy to be partly outside and partly behind the counter."

Two of a Kind.

"I wonder," said the horse editor, "why some of those Wall street chromos are called securities?"

"It is on the same principle," replied the snake editor, "that plays which won't draw are called attractions."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

CLUB NOTES

The L. L. C. held the closing session for the club year Saturday afternoon with Mrs. Swineford. The reports of the secretary and treasurer were read and accepted. These were very encouraging. The secretary's report showed a large per cent of the members present last year with the work brought up, and an increased interest by all in the club. The treasurer reported all debts paid and quite a sum remains in the treasury. The literary part of the program consisted of two papers. First "Glimpses into the 20th century" by Mrs Eliza Schaab, This was an excellent paper carefully prepared and full of good things. She drew her conclusions from these events of the closing years of the present century to foreshadow what we might expect in the coming one. The second paper was by Mrs. Barns, entitled, "A Trip Around the World." This was of course an imaginary one. But she gave many bright little incidents that might occur in an ordinary traveler's experience and avoided statistics and tedious descriptions yet gave many little bits of valuable information. At the close of this paper, the election of officers took place, and resulted in the election of the following persons:

President, Mrs. Alice Lewis; Vice-President Mrs. Tillie McCord; Secretary, Mrs. Sara Brown Guild; Treasurer, Mrs. Haddessa Ralston; Critic, Mrs. Ida E. Emanuel.

Mrs. Swineford had invited the ladies to tea, which was served in the spacious dining room of the hotel. The retiring president, Mrs. Willis, escorted Mrs. Lewis the new president to the table followed by the other members, all sat down to an elegant spread such as the Swineford House knows well how to provide, at the close of the lunch, speeches were called for from several members, Dr. Vesta Swarts, Mrs. Lottie Cochran, Mrs. Houser and Mrs. Ehlers. All responded in a bright happy manner.

The club adjourned to meet Oct. 7, with the new president, Mrs. Lewis, this being a custom of the club for several years and this first meeting is called "President's Day." The members of the club feel that they have had a successful and profitable year and look forward to the 18th year of their club existence with bright anticipation of continued success.

There were present beside the regular members the following honorary members: Mrs. Ehlers, and Dr. Vesta Swarts, of Auburn, Mrs. Houser, of Indianapolis, and Mrs. Lottie Cochran, of Tucson, Arizona. The other visitors were Mrs. C. W. Kaley, of Red Cloud, Neb., Mrs. N. H. Weaver, of Attica, Ind., and Mrs. G. H. Forkner of Auburn.

A Surprise.

A pleasant surprise party was held at the fine country residence of Edgar Wise, two miles east of town on Saturday, June 24, it being the 41st birthday of Mrs. Wise, who hadjust returned the previous evening from a visit near Canton, Ohio. Of course she was completely surprised when neighbors and friends to the number of 55 gathered in, with well filled baskets from which a bountiful supper was served consisting of chicken, pie, cakes, ice cream, lemonade, etc. Then they assembled in the spacious parlors where they were entertained with music on the piano, both vocal and instrumental by Mrs. Maggie Richey and also Mr. and Mrs. Wise. Mrs. Wise was the recipient of a fine set of dishes and also an elegant parlor lamp. May she live to have many more such gatherings.

Our Manila Supplement.

Our readers will remember that we recently received a copy of "Freedom," an American newspaper published at Manila in the Philippines. The paper is dated February 16, and contains a glowing account of the capture and surrender of Iloilo, which is of especial interest because written and printed on the spot by American newspaper men. We have had two pages of the "Freedom" photographed for reproduction in our paper, but for greater convenience have issued a supplement to the present number of the COURIER. We think this will be prized by our readers as a souvenir of the noble work of American soldiers in the far east.

COURT NEWS

Monday's Daily.

The first case to begin this morning was Robert A. Chappell, administrator vs Wabash Ry. for damages for the death of Ray A Chappell at the crossing east of Hamilton. His son was killed at the same time. Chappell is represented by Baxter & Brown of Auburn and Judge R. Wes McBride of Indianapolis. The railroad is represented by Rose & Rose of this place, and Judge Hammond and his son, and Judge Sims of Lafayette who are attorneys for the Wabash for the state of Indiana. The case is one of great importance and the list of attorneys shows it will be a hard struggle. It will likely take all the week.

The Johns and Booth cases, that plead guilty the other day, will not be decided till Skip Burnhart has his trial which will be July 5.

Jim Decker was called into court today and given one year for larceny.

Tuesday's Daily.

In the make up for the jury in the Chappell case, but two changes were made. Worth Coats went off and Wm Crane took his place. O. L. Wheaton went off and Joe Johnson took his place.

Testimony in the Chappell case is going on. The opening speech for Chappell was by Judge McBride, and that for the Railroad was by Judge Hammond.

We were a little too previous yesterday as to Jim Decker. He had not received his sentence at the time we supposed. We had been incorrectly informed. But today, Judge Best sentenced him to the Reformatory South for one to three years. This looks like a hard sentence for stealing a paint brush, but the law gives the Judge no choice this being Jim's second offense. He took his jail sentence last year.

Wednesday's Daily.

The plaintiff has put in the following witnesses: Mrs. Ray Chappell, the widow; R. A. Chappell, the administrator; Jacob Kepler, Wash Farley, David Aldrich, Otis M. Gilmore, Harley Griffith, Henry Wingert, Ora Kriebel, Miss Dora Allen, Miss Grace Code, Fred Sanxter and N. W. Reed. This forenoon they added two to this list.

The story of the widow was as to the accident itself and her terrible experience. They were going east and approached the railroad by going down a hill, the roadway being cut down so as to form a sort of gutter, leaving a high ridge of ground between them and the railway track. They could not see the train for the embankment or high ground prevented. As they reached the lowest point in the road, they stopped the team to listen, but heard nothing. They started on, the roadway rising a little to pass the track. Just then the train, running at a high speed rushed out of the cut to the west, coming from behind them, and struck them. The buggy was thrown against the bank to the east of the road and on the north side of the track some fifty feet from where it was struck. The horse was thrown to the farther side of the track, but the family were all thrown near the buggy. Mr. Chappell and the boy were instantly killed, their necks being broken. Mrs. Chappell said she did not see the train till it was almost on them. Then came the crash at once and she remembered nothing for about twenty-four hours. But though unconscious, it was found her injuries were not fatal. The little girl was thrown as far as the rest, but fell in such a way she was not injured.

It will be noticed that as the wagon road ran directly east, the railroad at that point is bearing to the north as we are looking east. The railroad is in a deep cut all along there, and a train cannot be easily seen, especially from the wagon road which is in a cut also, where Chappell was going down to the crossing. It is considered a very dangerous place to cross.

The testimony for the plaintiff is mainly to show how difficult it is to see a train along there and to show the high speed at which the train ran. But the chief point is that they say, no whistle was blown or bell rung. All the witnesses so far agree on hearing no signal. Several of these were going along the same road at the time, some being ahead of Chappell and some behind. Quite a number of them had been delegates to a C. E. or similar meeting at Waterloo and were on their way home. Mr. Kriebel was just ahead of Mr. Chappell. He said he neither saw nor heard a train, but soon after he had crossed the track, he heard a crash, or some unusual sound, that attracted his attention. He supposes now it was the train striking Chappell's rig, but he did not look back at once, but soon noticed the train running along at his left, slowing up. It stopped, and he thinks backed up. He heard no signals. This was the substance of all the testimony.

This morning several photographs of the roads, the cuts, etc., taken at the time and while the wrecked buggy was yet lying there, were shown and put in evidence. C. E. VanAuken, who was present when they were taken, was examined. He had measured the ground; could not see train when 90 feet from the track; could see a train when he got but a few feet from the north rail. It appears that the road as one nears the track when going east is on high ground until we reach the right of way, when we go down hill in a cut. The railroad runs in a cut so deep that it is not very easily seen from the wagon road, especially as at that time a heavy growth of wheat was standing between the road and the railway.

Dr. Gibbs testified next. He is an amateur photographer and took the pictures shown to the jury. He explained the location of the pictures, the lay of the ground, etc., to the attorneys and jury, and all of the forenoon was spent in this way. The attorneys admitted it was "art day" in the case.

Needed a Fig Leaf.

Sam Davenport almost needed a fig leaf at Robison park yesterday. He and several other boys went off by themselves and went bathing in the river. When Sam came out he found someone had stolen his underclothing. The only reason they had not stolen all he had was that the rest of his garments were in the boat out of reach. Sam suddenly lost interest in the picnic and the park and dreaded the appearance of a bevy of bright eyed Auburn girls as he would dread a lot of smallpox germs. What was to be done? He could't sit there always. But Ed Baxter is one of the handiest men ever taken along on such occasions. He volunteered to go to Fort Wayne, eight miles away, and get Sam the needed underclothing and found that Samuel, Peter and Maximilian had just what his young friend needed, and at the end of an hour and a half Sam rejoined the group of girls. But somehow they had heard of the trouble (Ed Baxter of course don't know how) and Sam realized how utterly helpless a fellow is in the clutches of a lot of mischief-loving girls. It is all over now, but the next Sam goes to the Park, he will take along an extra suit for fear of what might happen.

Troubles of Their Own.

Four young people with a two horse team drove over from Columbia City yesterday, arriving here in the evening. They put the team in Myers' barn, and the party went to visit the families of John Lochner and John Clark, who are relatives of some of the party, who are Ollie Scott, Joseph Wolfensperger, Suda Wolfensperger and Ada McFarrin About 9 in the evening, they got ready to go home when it was found one of the horses was sick. But they had to get home some way, as one of the young men is a baker, and had "set his dough" before starting and, the bread must be out for the early custom. It was then found that no teams could be had here as all were engaged. Finally a single rig was secured and the well horse took home the baker, and one of the girls who is a cook in a restaurant, so they could get to their work in time. The other two staid all night and went home on the 8 a. m. train. The sick horse is still at Dr. Fitch's, but one of the men will be back for it in a day or two.

AN ENGLISH AUTHOR.

FAMOUS WRITER OF "ALICE IN WONDERLAND."

Some of the Peculiarities and Eccentricities of "Lewis Carroll"—He Was Penurious in Some Ways, but Very Generous in Others.

S. D. Collingwood, a relative of the author of "Alice in Wonderland," contributes an article to the Century on "Some of Lewis Carroll's Child-Friends." Mr. Collingwood gives this picture of Lewis Carroll:

It was only to those who had but few personal dealings with him that he seemed stiff and "donnish"; to his more intimate acquaintances who really understood him, each little eccentricity of manner or of habits was a delightful addition to his charming and interesting personality. That he was, in some respects, eccentric, cannot be denied; for instance, he never wore an overcoat, and always wore a tall hat, whatever might be the climatic conditions. He would wear only cotton gloves; in these small personal matters he had a great fear of extravagance. At dinner in his rooms, small pieces of cardboard took the place of table-mats; they answered the purpose perfectly well, he said, and to buy anything else would be a mere waste of money.

On the other hand, when purchasing books for himself, or giving treats to the children he loved, he never seemed to consider expense at all.

He very seldom sat down to write, preferring the erect attitude. When making tea for his friends, he used—in order, I suppose, to expedite the process—to walk up and down the room waving the tea-pot about, and telling meanwhile those delightful anecdotes of which he had an inexhaustible supply.

In church he would never stand while the procession was entering the choir, thinking that the custom had a tendency to make the little choristers conceited. He did not care to speak for several minutes after service, so that the transition from spiritual to worldly matters in his mind might not be too sudden.

Great were his preparations before going a journey: each separate article used to be carefully wrapped up in a piece of paper all to itself, so that his trunks contained nearly as much paper as more useful things. The bulk of the luggage was sent on a day or two before by goods-train, while he himself followed on the appointed day, laden only with his well-known little black bag, which he always insisted on carrying himself.

He had a strong objection to staring colors in dress, his favorite combination being pink and gray. One little girl who came to stay with him was absolutely forbidden to wear a red frock, of a somewhat pronounced hue, while out in his company.

At meals he was always very abstemious, while he took nothing in the middle of the day except a glass of wine and a biscuit. Under these circumstances it is not very surprising that the healthy appetites of his little friends filled him with wonder, and even with alarm. When he took a certain one of them out with him to a friend's house to dinner, he used to give the host or hostess a gentle warning, to the mixed amazement and indignation of the child: "Please be careful, because she eats a good deal too much."

Another peculiarity was his objection to being invited to dinner or any other social gatherings. He made a rule of never accepting invitations. "Because you have invited me, therefore I cannot come," was the usual form of his refusal. I suppose the reason of this was his hatred of the interference with work which engagements of this sort occasion.

He had an extreme horror of infection, as will appear from the following illustration: Miss Isa Bowman and her sister Nellie were at one time staying with him at Eastbourne, when news came from home that their youngest sister had caught the scarlet fever. From that day every letter which came from Mrs. Bowman to the children was held up by Mr. Dodgson, while the two little girls, standing at the opposite end of the room, had to read it as best they could. Mr. Dodgson, who was the soul of honor, used always to turn his head to one side, during these readings, lest he might inadvertently see some words that were not meant for his eyes.

HERO OF THE MINES.

Escape of a Man Who Would Have Given His Life for Another.

A Western mining journal records a shining act of self-sacrifice on a miner's part. Michael Verran was engaged with two other men in sinking a shaft. They had drilled a hole in the usual way for blasting, and then, according to custom, one of the three ascended the shaft, leaving the others to finish preparations for firing the charge.

Michael and his companion had become familiar with danger. They were heedless, and while the fuse was attached they set to work to cut it off with a stone and an iron drill. At the first blow the drill gave off a spark, and the hissing of the fuse told the miners that the charge was fired.

With the impulse of self-preservation, both miners dashed to the shaft, and holding to the bucket gave the signal to be drawn up. But alas! the strength of the man at the windlass was unequal to lifting two; he could wind up only one man at a time.

To remain was death to both, and by right it was Michael's turn to ascend. He looked at his companion, stepped from the bucket, and said, resolutely:

"Go up, lad. You have a wife. Don't mind me," and he pushed his fellow almost roughly into the bucket.

The bucket swiftly ascended and the man was safe. A great roar and boom arose from the shaft, and then up came the smoke and rubbish. Following this all was still in the shaft. There could be no doubt of the unfortunate miner's fate, imprisoned in that deadly shaft. Yet one and another hurried down and began shouting, in faltering tones:

"Michael! Michael! Are you here?"

And the answer came, muffled but distinct, "I am here, thank God!"

They found him, unhurt, beneath a huge slab of stone that had blown across him and lodged against the wall of rock, protecting him from all harm of flying fragments. Truly his escape seemed miraculous, and little else was talked of among the miners for days afterward.

RECENT INVENTIONS.

A reversible tie has been placed on the market, having sides of different color or material with the central portion of each side formed of a raised and padded strip, which covers the ends of the straps and forms the upper portion of the tie.

Floor sweepings are easily taken up by a new dustpan, which rests in a depression cut in the floor, the edges being flush with the floor and allowing the dirt to be swept in without the necessity of stooping to hold the pan with the hand.

To prevent the lines from getting caught under the pole of a vehicle a rein guard is formed of a piece of wire bent into a spring loop, to be attached to the pole near the end, surrounding the point and guarding the lines from catching under it.

An Australian has designed a fire escape in which the speed of descent is regulated by levers mounted on the drum on which the rope is wound, friction plates being attached to the levers to press against the ends of the spool and act as a brake.

To illustrate the phenomena of thunder and lightning an apparatus has been designed which accumulates the force in a suitable holder from a small generator, discharging it from a flat plate suspended horizontally to objects placed on a platform below.

A New York inventor has patented a fire-escape which is out of sight when not in use and does not occupy extra space in the room, consisting of a casing to be attached to the under side of a chair, carrying a reel on which the rope ladder is wound.

ANECDOTE AND INCIDENT

At a recent horse race at Perak, in the Malay peninsula, the sun blazed down on a field of hot, excited horses and men, waiting till the eccentricities of the starter and an even more eccentric horse should combine to get them in line. The patience of the former was at last exhausted. "Bring up that horse! Come up on that beast! You'll get into trouble over this, I tell you," and so forth. "I can't help it, sir," replied the Australian lightweight jockey, patiently, "this is a cab horse, this 'orse is. He won't start till the door shuts—and—I haven't got a door!"

At a military bazaar in England an officer thought he fancied a certain article exposed for sale at one of the stalls, and he was certain he fancied the lady who presided at the stall. He remarked, therefore, that he thought that particular article very pretty. The lady said: "Yes, it is very pretty. My mother sent it." "Ah, really"—pursued the officer, determined to discover the name of the owner of the eyes that had bewitched him—"really, let me see—I think I have met your mother. Her name is——" "The Queen of England," answered the lady. The officer did not wait for the fancied article.

Bret Harte is so frequently complimented as the author of "Little Breeches," that he is almost as sorry it was ever written as is Col. John Hay, who would prefer his fame to rest on more ambitious work. A gushing lady, who prided herself upon her literary tastes, said to him once: "My dear Mr. Harte, I am so delighted to meet you. I have read everything you ever wrote, but of all your dialect verse there is none that compares to your 'Little Breeches.'" "I quite agree with you, madam," said Mr. Harte, "but you have put the little breeches on the wrong man."

A man who recently returned from a trip to New England overheard two Southerners talking over their experiences on their first visit to Boston. "You know these here little, round, white beans," said one. The other admitted that he did. "We feed 'em to hosses down our way." "Yes." "Well, sir, up to Boston they take them beans, boil 'em for three or four hours, slap a little sowbelly, an' some molasses, and some other truck in with 'em, and what do you suppose they do with 'em?" "Gosh, I do' no." "Well, sir," said the first speaker, sententiously, "I'm d—d if they don't eat 'em!"

On the second day out, one of the sailors on a White Star steamer had a bad fall and sustained a severe cut on his head. One of the ladies on board was very solicitous about him, and inquired of the captain that evening how he was doing. Rough weather came on, and she was compelled to forget the wounded sailor in her own suffering. Four days later, when she emerged, white and weak, from her stateroom, she saw the poor sailor, with a strip of plaster on his forehead. "How is your head?" she asked, kindly, as he passed by on some duty. "West by south, ma'am," was the reply, delivered with respectful but hasty clearness, and he was gone.

On the journey from Vienna to St. Petersburg, Cumberland, a well-known thought reader entertained his fellow passengers by guessing their thoughts. One of the travelers, a Polish Jew, who took the whole thing for a hoax, offered to pay Cumberland the sum of fifty roubles if he could divine his thoughts. Visibly amused, Cumberland said: "You are going to the fair at Nijini-Novgorod, where you intend to purchase goods to the extent of twenty thousand roubles, after which you will declare yourself bankrupt, and compound with your creditors for three per cent." On hearing these words the Jew gazed at the speaker with reverential awe. He then, without uttering a syllable, drew out of the leg of his boot a shabby purse, and handed over the fifty roubles. Whereupon the great magician triumphantly inquired: "Then I have guessed your thoughts, eh?" "No," replied the Jew, "but you have given me a brilliant idea."

The men who neglect their own business to take an interest in the affairs of others never get along very well. If a man's affairs amount to anything, he has enough to keep him busy.

LET THE EAGLE SCREAM!

A Fourth Explosion.

HILLVIEW folks couldn't quite make out old Seth Crowne. As long back as anybody could remember he had been a fixture in the village. Like any fixture, he had his place—that of a decrepit, childish old man, useless but harmless. He was always cheery and sociable, and everybody gave him a good word. Along towards May, however, old Seth became quieter than usual, and when June came in he had grown into almost a mystery.

"Wonder what the ancient's up to?" commented a lounger on the tavern veranda one evening, as the object of the remark came limping into view.

"That gets me, too," supplemented a companion. "Look at him now—dusty, tottering, clean done out. He's taken to tramping lately. Si Warden told me he came across him at Sag Center day before yesterday."

"Afoot?"

"Just that, and it's a thirty mile sprint there and back."

All kinds of remarks attended the appearance and disappearance of old Seth. One man had seen him working on a farm a few miles distant, another had observed him peddling water cresses in an adjacent town, and all this was so contrary to Seth's habits for ten years past that the general conviction was that, idea, delusion or dream, old Seth was "up to something."

Crowne lived with his widowed daughter-in-law and her son. Albert Crowne had died five years before, being the victim of an accident at a sawmill.

Death had come so suddenly that his family knew nothing of it till his body was brought home—so suddenly that there was no time for preparation for a new kind of a life. Hitherto they had lived comfortably, even generously. Mr. Crowne earned good money, and was supposed to have several thousand dollars in bank. In fact, after his death, it was learned that he had drawn a sum amounting to twenty-three hundred dollars from a local institution the week before the accident. In his pocket was a vague memorandum coupling the amount with his father's name, but the shock of his death had so far driven old Seth deeper into confusion and mental trouble, that when approached on the subject he at first seemed to remember something about it, and then, sadly shaking his silvered head, said it was all a dream—all a muddle.

From that time until now no trace of the missing money had been discovered. Widow Crowne had set bravely at work to earn a living for three. Her son, Elmer, was now sixteen and was fairly started as clerk in a village store. But the salary was small, his prospects vague, and the bitterest drop in the mother's cup of grief was that she could not send him to college, for he had shown unmistakable evidence of more than ordinary intellectuality.

The new wandering habits of her aged father-in-law had been quite a source of worry to Mrs. Crowne at first, but as the old man came back safely night after night, and as he seemed in the main to be brighter and happier for his change of habits, he was not restricted in his notions.

It looked as if a last erratic spurt of activity, a flash of odd reason had come into the clouded mind before final dotage came on.

As it neared July old Seth got up earlier mornings and came home later evenings. Young Elmer Crowne commented on the fact at the dinner table one day.

"I don't see what strange idea grandfather has in his mind," he remarked. "There seems to be some system to his actions. He takes a pleasure in doing little odd tasks around the country for trifling amounts, and the farmers humor his fancy. The boys over on the green say that he sits around some afternoons watching them and listening to their plans for the Fourth of July with great interest. Ned Wayne told me yesterday—he's a great favorite with grandfather, you know—that ever since they began talking up Independence Day celebration he has manifested the greatest interest, and very confidentially told Ned a day or two ago that he was going to help make it a day remembered by Hillview. Ned says that grandfather brings mysterious little packages from the different towns, and chuckles when he promises a wonderful surprise for the Fourth."

"As long as he gets into no trouble it is better not to notice his doings," sighed Mrs. Crowne.

Those "doings" came to a startling climax with Elmer one day a few weeks later, however. He was seated at a desk in the store when Ned Wayne dashed in breathless.

"Your mother has sent for you," he stuttered.

"What has happened?" queried Elmer, arising in alarm.

"Your grandfather. He's acting queerly. And, say! your mother has found out what he's been up to for a couple of months back."

"What?"

"Fourth of July. It looks as if he got the idea in his head that he wanted to celebrate, and has been working to that end right along."

"How do you know?" asked Elmer.

"Your mother says so. You know the old smoke house in your yard? Well, he's used that as a storehouse for the little parcels he's been bringing home."

"What were they?"

"Powder. To-day he came home with an old musket. He's loaded it to the brim, and he's pacing up and down before the smokehouse. He thinks it's the Fourth already, and says as soon as he gets through with the patriotic speech he's making he's going to give Hillview such a salute as it never heard before."

"Gracious!" gasped Elmer, with a vivid thrill of apprehension.

"Gracious" it was, as he hurried home. A crowd stood outside the fence. His mother, with a white, frightened face, was vainly endeavoring to get his grandfather to return to the house.

Old Seth Crowne stood near the open door of the smokehouse, and in strident tones of supposed eloquence he was repeating some patriotic school declamation that had returned to his memory after many years.

"First in peace!" he roared, and struck a match.

"Grandfather!" shouted Elmer, rushing up.

"First in war!"—and old Seth lit a paper.

Elmer changed his run to a spring. He was pretty near his aged relative now.

"And first in the hearts of his countrymen!"—and the old man with a hurra flung the lighted paper inside the smokehouse door.

Boom!

The next two minutes were a kind of chaos for Elmer Crowne. He was conscious of a mighty flare, a deafening explosion, of grabbing the old man, of tumbling, rolling, running with him.

Then, blackened, shocked, startled, he looked around.

The concussion had blown several boys off the fence, had shattered half a dozen windows in the cottage near by.

The smokehouse was no more. Pieces of boards were scattered for fifty feet around. No one was hurt.

"It was a great—a great salute, eh?" feebly chuckled the old man.

Some boys were curiously inspecting an old trunk that had been blown from the attic of the structure.

They kicked over some old rags and papers. Then one of them, unknotting a twisted, ancient silk handkerchief, uttered a quick cry as there fell out a great roll of bills.

Mrs. Crowne darted forward. She recognized the handkerchief. It had belonged to her dead husband.

And here was money! They counted it—twenty-three hundred dollars.

The lost money had come to light. Who had hidden it? Mr. Crowne? His father? At all events, it had come to light in time to send Elmer to college, to bring brightness into two other lives besides his own, and old Seth vaguely seemed to realize that, after all, he had done a great thing by his witless celebration.

The story soon got about town. It was only the third of the month, but then and there excited juvenile Hillview followed up the grand initial salute fired by old Seth Crowne, by starting in the Fourth of July twenty-four hours ahead of time.

A SENTIMENTAL HOLIDAY.

Observance of the Fourth of July Has No National Official Sanction.

THERE are no national holidays in the United States, and, contrary to general belief, the Fourth of July is not a national holiday. The individual States make the holidays observed within their borders, and the Fourth of July, being made a legal holiday in all the States and in the District of Columbia, is to all intents and purposes a national holiday, but not strictly so, for a holiday can only be made a national one by act of Congress, acting for the entire country. This it has never done, in the case of the Fourth of July, although it has from time to time prescribed several special national holidays. In the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, it passed a bill making Labor Day a public holiday in the District of Columbia, and it has recognized the existence of certain State-ordered holidays, for commercial purposes, in such legislation, for instance, as the bankruptcy act, but, with the exceptions named, there is no general, permanent statute on the subject in the laws of the United States. It may be added that the proclamation of the President himself, designating Thanksgiving Day, for instance, as a holiday, makes it a legal holiday only in those States which have laws providing for it.

It so happens that the Fourth of July is a statutory holiday in all the States, each having individually recognized it as such in its laws. With the exception of Christmas, it is the only holiday that is universally legalized in all the States, although Thanksgiving Day is observed in all, notwithstanding the fact that it is not legalized in several of them. Washington's birthday is a legal holiday in all the States except Arkansas, Iowa and Mississippi.

But the Fourth is essentially a national holiday, if regarded from a sentimental standpoint. Its recognition is general all over the country, but is more marked in the North and West than in the South. In some Southern States, work and business are attended to as usual, although in most of the Northern and Western States the day is given up wholly to rest, recreation, sports and patriotic exercises. From time to time efforts have been made to add to the impressiveness of the Fourth of July, by some national, official action, but nothing has ever come of them. It remains, notwithstanding, as deeply rooted an event in the nation's heart as any institution in any land, and the noisy lad who fires his firecrackers and blows his tin horn is a sight as dear, even to those of tender nerves, as the traditional sights of any other land.

An Athletic Age.

Of late years, the Fourth, like most other general holidays, has become a day mainly devoted to out-of-door sports, in accordance with the prevailing athletic fever which has spread out all over the land. The usual processions take place in the morning, in most places, but they are no longer the chief events of the day. On the contrary, the youth and likewise the old age of the land, hies it to the nearest field, track or water course, and sports of all kinds, notably baseball—the national game—boating and sailing regattas, and similar exercises are looked forward to with even more enthusiasm than was accorded in past years to the march past of the uniformed ranks and the flowery orations that used to be such marked accompaniments of the day's celebrations, but are now, it would seem, gradually but steadily becoming less and less appreciated. It is an athletic age, and the natural use of a holiday, according to the present popular notion, is to devote it to as many of the health-giving sports as possible.

BILLIE'S FOURTH OF JULY DINNER

"Gee, but I'm hungry! This looks good."

"And so does this."

But they didn't agree with him.

THE WALTZ KING.

Johann Strauss Wrote the Music that Charmed Millions.

The recent death of Johann Strauss at his home in Vienna closed the career of one of the world's greatest and most successful musicians and composers. So long as music will have charms for humanity, the rippling glide of his "Beautiful Blue Danube" waltzes will quiet the listening soul like the murmuring waters of the noble river from which they derive their name. At the age of 6 years he wrote his first waltz. His mother encouraged him in his musical studies, but his father, who was a leading musician of the day, used every means to prevent him from becoming a musician, and carried his anger to such a degree as to entirely separate him from his wife. By the aid of his mother and a few friends he continued his studies, and in 1844, at the age of 19, the Austrian capital had gone wild over him. He was the idol of the hour, and was proclaimed "Waltz King Johann Strauss Second."

Johann Strauss was a most prolific writer. He wrote day or night, whenever the fancy took him, and he had a habit of jotting down musical thoughts on his cuffs and collars. Some of the most popular dance music ever composed was thus far recorded. The Strauss dances number nearly 500, and many of them are familiar the world over. In 1872 the waltz king made his first visit to America. In that year he accepted the invitation of Patrick Gilmore to conduct the Boston peace jubilee. During his presence he conducted an orchestra of a thousand musicans. His audiences seemed never to tire of his music, while the magnetism of the man with both audience and orchestra was simply astounding.

CHINESE TYPEWRITER.

The Most Complicated and Wonderful Writing Machine in the World.

The most complicated and wonderful typewriter in the world has recently been invented by the Rev. D. Z. Sheffield, an American missionary in China. It prints no less than 4,000 distinct characters, which are absolutely necessary for transacting ordinary business in the Chinese language. The type is cast on the under side of the wheel, shown in the picture, which is reproduced from the Scientific American. On the upper side of the wheel are pasted printed characters, each exactly over the character it represents. It takes four motions to print each character, but even then much time is saved, for in writing the Chinese characters from two to twenty-five strokes of the brush are required. Each character signifies not a letter, but an entire word.

PRESIDENT OF BROWN.

An Eloquent Preacher Chosen for the University of Providence.

Rev. Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, who has recently been selected for the Presidency of Brown University at Providence, to succeed E. Benjamin Andrews, was born in Worcester, Mass., in 1859, and was graduated from Brown University in the class of 1880. He remained in that institution as an instructor in mathematics for one year and then took a course in the Newton Theological Seminary. He was ordained to the ministry in 1884, and that same year became pastor of the State Street Baptist Church, in Springfield, Mass., the largest church of that denomination in the city. He resigned the pastorate in 1889 to accept a call from New York to fill the pulpit of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, left vacant by the resignation of Rev. Dr Thomas Armitage.

REV. DR. FAUNCE

Dr. Armitage was one of the giants of the Baptist denomination, and some of Dr. Faunce's friends feared that the young minister had assumed too heavy a responsibility in undertaking to maintain the high standard set by his predecessor. But he speedily proved himself the right man in the right place, and under his guidance the church has enjoyed continued prosperity. As a preacher he is eloquent and forcible.

Chimney Made of Cast Iron.

Cast-iron chimneys are now being employed in some large buildings. They are composed of six-foot lengths of piping jointed together, and are built in the brickwork. It is contended that they are cheaper to construct and are more economical. The iron takes the heat more quickly than brick and retains it better, hence less warmth is required to be drawn up the shaft in order to raise the temperature to a point that will permit the fire to throw its heat into the room.

Tattooed Dogs.

Tattooed dogs are now the fashion in London. A coat of arms or a monogram is marked on the throat or breast of the animal. The process is made almost painless by the use of cocaine.

A woman has to be a lightning thinker if she thinks before she speaks.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Redemption.—Everything in redemption presupposes immortality, and bears directly upon it.—Rev. R. S. Storrs, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Spiritual World.—Rational thought is unable to do more in the face of its own problems than to assert that there is a spiritual world.—Rev. L. P. Mercer, Swedenborgian, Chicago, Ill.

Moral Progress.—Men have not been wanting in number or in argument who have declared the assumption of moral progress to be an unverified myth.—Rev. E. G. Hirsch, Hebrew, Chicago, Ill.

Good Christians.—Many people who account themselves good Christians are good Christians only in the crowd. It is so easy to go with the multitude!—Rev. Geo. Hodges, Episcopalian, Cambridge, Mass.

Missions.—Through prayer were missions born; by prayer they are nourished, and only by the aid of the united prayer of the Christian church will they reach their ultimate victory.—Rev. J. L. Barton, Congregationalist, Bangor, Me.

National Convenience.—What I would have you understand is that we must always judge events from a high moral and religious point of view. Do not emphasize too much national convenience.—Rev. F. L. Patton, Presbyterian, Princeton, N. J.

Doctrine of Evolution.—A deeper reading of the doctrine of evolution shows that the goal which Nature had in view from the beginning was the production and perfection of the spirit of man.—Rev. M. D. Shutter, Universalist, Minneapolis, Minn.

A New Duty.—We must boldly face the new duty that confronts us and give to those distant islands religious liberty, the open Bible, self-government, Anglo-Saxon law and the separation of church and state.—Rev. W. J. Chichester, Presbyterian, Chicago, Ill.

A World of Spirit.—This every-day, commonplace world of hopes and fears, meetings and partings, joys and sorrows; this world, according to the gospel story, is incased in a world of spirit, immersed in it.—Rev. Minot Savage, Unitarian, New York City.

The Work of Christ.—If there is any man on earth who does identically the work of Christ it is the self-sacrificing physician. Over your office door let me write, I pray for him whose flight is in the winter. Christ spared not himself. By his stripes are we healed.—Rev. S. A. Northrop, Baptist, Kansas City, Mo.

Our Conceptions of Christ.—There were three great ideas in which the world had made great advances in the last 200 years, and it seemed that they must have an influence on our conceptions of Christ. The first was the perception of the unity of mankind.—Dr. Van Dyke, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Right Social Relations.—This is, perhaps, the greatest age that ever was. But how pitiably small it will seem to future generations, that will not only outshine our material splendor, but also will employ ethical principles for the establishment of right social relations.—Rev. Charles Freischer, Hebrew, Boston, Mass.

True Peace.—To attain true peace of soul we must fight and put out of our lives those evil tendencies of selfishness, etc., represented by the Amorites, Hittites, etc., as encountered by the Israelites. Good suggestions and influences do not drive or force us; they only lead.—Rev. Dr. Pratt, Swedenborgian, San Jose, Cal.

An Eternity of Joy.—God is marshaling his hosts and calls upon every man of you to follow. If you are not prepared to follow him now, I entreat of you to put it off no longer. The decision you make to-day may mean an eternity of light and joy, or an eternity of sorrow and darkness.—Rev. H. C. Stanton, Presbyterian, Kansas City, Mo.

The Institutional Church.—The caterers for the entertainment of the masses study the wants and needs of the people. They are practical and persevering. Ministers would do well to study the methods of mere pleasure-seekers. Some have done so, and the result is the "institutional church."—Rev. W. H. Tubb, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

Unity.—The nature of this unity is explained in different ways and all care is taken to exclude the Catholic notion. It consists in a common union which Christ by faith, hope and charity, in believing in certain fundamental truths which are necessary for salvation, in serving the same Christ, and in adoring the same God.—Rev. J. M. Hayes, Roman Catholic, Dallas, Cal.

Flowers as a Symbol.—From the earliest historic times people have placed flowers on the graves of their dead, flowers which symbolize the beauty and frailty of human life. As the loved ones whose memories are cherished have faded and withered, so these flowers placed above their graves, fade and wither, telling the story of human life. We honor our soldier dead precisely because of their faithful service to their country. They faced danger and welcomed death in order that they might do their duty. This is what our cherishing their memory means. This is what renders it fitting that we should put flowers each season upon their graves and keep their memories ever green in our hearts.—Rev. T. T. Eaton, Baptist, Louisville, Ky.

Zulus Fear Mothers-in-Law.

Among the mysterious customs of the Zulus is the dread which the married man has of his mother-in-law. He is afraid to meet her and always holds up his shield to screen him from her glance when he passes her dwelling.

Nightingale and Elephant.

It is said that if the "voice" of an elephant were as loud in proportion as that of a nightingale, his trumpetings could be heard round the world.

Unpaid bills are sometimes the source of a poet's best efforts.

FIFTY YEARS OLD

Why let your neighbors know it?

And why give them a chance to guess you are even five or ten years more?

Better give them good reasons for guessing the other way. It is very easy; for nothing tells of age so quickly as gray hair.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

is a youth-renewer.

It hides the age under a luxuriant growth of hair the color of youth.

It never fails to restore color to gray hair. It will stop the hair from coming out also.

It feeds the hair bulbs. Thin hair becomes thick hair, and short hair becomes long hair.

It cleanses the scalp; removes all dandruff, and prevents its formation.

We have a book on the Hair which we will gladly send you.

If you do not obtain all the benefits you expected from the use of the Vigor, write the doctor about it. Probably there is some difficulty with your general system which may be easily removed. Address, Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell, Mass.

A Voluntary Target.

James Collis was a gunner of the Sixty-sixth Regiment in the Afghan war of 1880. During the retreat from Maiwand the troops toiled on through the black night, the Afghans continually charging upon them. The gunners were frequently obliged to unlimber the guns and stand to them to check these furious assaults, which they did as coolly as if at drill on Woolwich Common. Many of the guns had been turned into temporary ambulances, and were loaded with wounded and dying men.

Collis had all day been carrying water to the wounded through the sharpest of the deadly firing, and came up to his gun just as a hot fire opened upon it from two sides. With one glance he saw that unless this fire could be diverted, there was no possibility of saving the lives of the wounded men.

Collis was unwounded, and borrowing a rifle, he deliberately opened fire on the enemy, making himself the target for their guns. There he stood, until he had fired thirty-two rounds, the bullets falling thick and fast around him, but not a hair of his head was harmed. The tired horses made an extra effort, the gun thundered out of range, the ranks closed up and the weary march went on.—Youth's Companion.

KEEP TAB ON THE GAS INSPECTOR.

THIS is the way to compute the amount of gas used in your house during the month, says the San Francisco Examiner. The meter tells the tale and the method is simple. On each meter are four dials. The dial on the left hand shows the hundreds of feet consumed; the one in the center the thousands; the third, the tens of thousands. The dial above the three does not concern you. It is merely for testing the meter. Every time the hand in the first dial moves one number 100 feet have been consumed. When the hand reaches 10 1,000 feet have been consumed; then the hand in the center dial moves one number. When the hand in the center dial gets around to 10 the hand in the third moves one number. The gas company never gives a meter to its consumer on which the hands of the dials point to nothing consumed. The hands are always well along in the numbers. This is done to confuse, but the computation of the gas consumed is none the less simple.

In the accompanying illustration the hand on the third dial points between 3 and 4. This means that over 30,000 feet of gas passed through the meter. On the center dial the hand points between 4 and 5, indicating [illegible] more than 4,000 feet of gas has been registered by that dial. On the first dial [illegible] on the figure 6, showing that the dial registers just 600 feet. This [illegible] together the number of feet registered by the meter 34,600. Now [illegible] of your meter when it is placed in your house, say on April [illegible] lines which represent the hands of the dial you will fi[illegible] still between the figures 3 and 4, the hand at the ce[illegible] the hand of the first dial on the figure 8. This [illegible] started with your meter with 34,600 feet [illegible] you the number of feet that has passed throu[illegible]

CHURCH 200 YEARS OLD.

Antiquated Monument of Protestant Episcopal Faith in America.

Right in the midst of the busiest part of Wilmington, Del., stands the grim, time-stained old gray church, the oldest living monument of Protestant Episcopal faith in America to-day. It is the Holy Trinity Church, colloquially called Old Swedes', built 200 years ago by the band of Swedish immigrants who settled on the Delaware. The erection of the building was commenced 1666, and the edifice was formally dedicated on Trinity Sunday, 1699. The size of the church inside of the walls was 60 feet in length, 30 feet in breadth, the walls being of hard gray stone. There were four doors, two windows on the north and two on the south. The roof was arched with logs and plastered and covered with cedar shingles. The pews in the church were made of fir. The aisle was seven feet in depth from the chancel to the door. The city has gradually grown around the old church, until to-day the Quick and the Dead are in the same spot. Amidst the hurly burly of life stands this venerable old church with solemn aspects silently bearing testimony to the existence and piety of a generation that has passed away forever.

Much time and labor have been spent on the old church in an effort to restore it to its former conditions. The wooden floor has been taken up and the original brick floor, where trod the zealous settlers 200 years ago, restored to its original appearance. The pulpit has been put back to its old place on the side.

GIRL FOUGHT WITH FIREBUGS.

Nebraska Teacher Who Saved a University Building.

All Nebraska has united in paying tribute to the fine quality of courage exhibited by Miss Lether E. Watson, art teacher at the Cotner University, who defeated the plans of two determined incendiaries who attempted to destroy all the seminary buildings. The faculty voted the young woman a handsome medal, appropriately inscribed, recounting her courageous action; the citizens of the village, in mass meeting, passed resolutions complimenting Miss Watson, and Governor Poynter has written her a letter in acknowledgment of the services rendered the State, and thanking her in the name of the people.

MISS WATSON.

Miss Watson was in her class-room, on the fifth floor of the university building, late in the afternoon, when she heard voices in the hall and dis-

PIANO WAS CYCLONE PROOF.

Instrument Goes Through Kirksville Tornado Unharmed.

A curiosity in the way of a cyclone-proof piano is on exhibition in one of the show windows of a Chicago piano firm. It is a piano that has been through a first-class cyclone and come out of the experience practically uninjured so far as its musical mechanism is concerned, although the building in which it was when the cyclone came was leveled with the ground as were also all the other buildings around it. The cyclone was the one which devastated Kirksville, Mo., and the country around it. The destructive character of the cyclone is well shown in the illustration, and yet in the case of this piano, the only damage sustained was the breaking of one pedal and a panel in the frame. Not a single hammer was broken, nor a string snapped, and the instrument can now be played on as well as if it had never been through a cyclone, with the exception of the one pedal mentioned. The photograph from which the illustration was taken was made on the morning after the cyclone. The house in which the piano stood was in the central path of the cyclone, where the most damage was done, every building around it being entirely demolished, with no semblance left whatever of their original condition.

Making Their Mouths Water.

The method employed by Dutch fishermen to ensure "astonishing catches" is thus described by the Golden Penny:

The fisherman puts a number of live worms and insects in a bottle partially filled with water, and then corks it securely. The bottle is dropped into the water, the fisherman sinking his line alongside.

It appears that the sight of the wriggling contents of the bottle so excites the appetite of the finny tribe that they fall easy victims to the baited hooks.

As a rule, the woman who has had as many as three husbands has never had one good one.

NEW OUTDOOR MODES.

GERMAN SOLDIER'S FEAT.

He Is Made to Swim in His Clothes and with All His Trappings.

Next to the British army there is probably no force in Europe so well trained as the soldiers of Germany, and without depreciating in the least the systems in vogue in our own military centers, it may be said that in certain respects the training of the German soldier is of a more practical and useful kind.

In the matter of swimming, for instance, the Germans are pre-eminently practical. It is self-evident that a thorough facility in swimming under the most difficult condition would be of the [illegible]t advantage to a soldier in war [illegible]. This advantage the German [illegible]ommy" is enabled to gain by a [illegible]rse of exercises designed for that [illegible]e. The second will be partly broken, to represent the identified dead, while the third will be broken off at the base, to represent the unidentified dead. The memorial will cost $7,500. The names of those who perished in the fire, but whose bodies were not recovered, will be cut in the stone.

MONSTER CRANE.

Electric Cantilever Device Used for the Building of Sea-Going Vessels.

The cut shows one of the monster pieces of machinery used for the building of sea-going vessels at the Newport News ship-building yards. This crane has a span of seventy feet, is worked by electricity and can lift at the central point thirty-five tons, and six tons at the extreme ends. These machines lift great castings, plates, shafts and other unwieldy pieces which form parts of battleships, and carry them to the place where they are wanted. They do the work more rapidly and more accurately than it was done by the old derrick process, and it takes only a few men to operate them. When the first electric crane was suggested its failure was predicted by many mechanics who have since then learned that the cranes are valuable labor-saving machines.

Talisman of the Hohenzollerns.

On his birthday and all great occasions the German Emperor wears a ring set with a small black stone which does not belong among precious stones, yet it is a jewel of great value, for it is considered the talisman of the Hohenzollern family. Tradition has it that this stone was placed on the bed of the wife of the great elector, John Cicero, by a frog. It is certain that this stone set in the ring was given to Frederick the Great by his father, Frederic I., who believed in the legend, according to certain documents in the royal archives at Berlin. Old Emperor William I. also believed in this talisman, and it is not surprising that William II., who respects the past and its traditions so deeply, should also treasure this stone as a sacred talisman, although its precise significance is no longer known. All that is remembered is that in some way it is the chief talisman of the Hohenzollerns.

GREAT TAMMANY LEADER

[The Catarrh of Summer.]

CONGRESSMAN AMOS J. CUMMINGS.

New York, Oct. 11th, 1898.
Pe-ru-na Drug M'f'g Co., Columbus, O.:

Gentlemen—Pe-ru-na is good for catarrh. I have tried it and know it. It relieved me immensely on my trip to Cuba, and I always have a bottle in reserve. Since my return I have not suffered from catarrh, but if I do I shall use Pe-ru-na again. Meantime you might send me another bottle.

Yours, AMOS J. CUMMINGS, M. C.

Summer catarrh assumes various forms. It produces dyspepsia and bowel complaint. It causes biliousness and diseases of the liver. It deranges the kidneys and bladder. Summer catarrh may derange the whole nervous system, when it is known to the medical profession as systemic catarrh. Pe-ru-na is a specific for all these forms of catarrh. Pe-ru-na never disappoints. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, for a free book on summer catarrh.

The Empress and Her Stable.

The Empress of Germany takes a keen interest in her private stables and in the riding lessons of her sons. Her majesty makes a point of having a daily ride, and when the weather is bad she takes it in the riding school. The empress always likes to be there when her younger sons are having their riding lesson, and often she will herself show them how to do what is being taught them. At reviews the empress rides a very tall horse; on ordinary occasions her mount is a black horse, and for hunting she prefers a handsome chestnut, which is very quiet and a good jumper. Generally she is accompanied in her drives by the emperor, for she rarely drives out alone. Her special carriage is painted blue and black, but all the others belonging to the court are red and black.

An Important Decision.

A notable decision was rendered recently in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, making permanent an injunction obtained by the California Fig Syrup Company restraining the defendant parties "from making, using or selling any liquid laxative medicine marked with the name 'Syrup of Figs,' or 'Fig Syrup,' or any colorable imitation of the same." The decision also protects the California Fig Syrup Company against imitation of their wrappers, boxes and symbolical designs used in connection with their famous laxative. The decision is of the greatest value, not only to manufacturers of proprietary articles, but to the public generally, as it affirms that the valuable reputation acquired by an article of merit will be protected by the courts, and that the party who builds the reputation by extensive and legitimate advertising is entitled to the full fruits of his enterprise.

The Flag Follows Trade.

Uncle Sam may now boast that "the sun never sets on the American flag," but the Stars and Stripes have but followed the achievements of the American inventor and mechanic. Years ago American harvesting machinery led the way and created a demand for itself in lands where "Old Glory" was never seen outside of books. Deering Harvesting Machines, made in Chicago, are sold to-day by the shipload from New Zealand to Norway, and from South Africa to Siberia, and in every land where grass and grain are harvested. The name of "Deering" is a household word the world over.

A New Match.

As the satisfactory outcome of experiments which have been in progress for some time past at the French Government match factories at Pantin, the object of which has been to produce a lucifer match without the employment of phosphorus, a match has been invented which, it is believed, will meet every requirement needed, while at the same time its manufacture, from the absence of phosphorus in its composition, will not induce that terrible necrosis of which the world has lately heard so much. No information is given as to the price at which the new match can be placed on the market, and unfortunately cost has a great deal more to do with the adoption of any new thing than the consideration of any benefit which may accrue to makers or consumers; but it may be presumed that the new match will compete in price favorably with the old one. It is said to ignite with ease and certainty on being rubbed on any rough surface.

He Was an Orphan.

A very amusing story is told in connection with Leopold de Rothschild's father. The son was in the habit of taking the same cab every morning from Piccadilly to St. Swithin's lane, and always gave the Jehu half a crown. One morning when the son was away the sire hailed the conveyance, and at the end of the journey gave the driver a florin. Cabby looked at the coin wistfully. "What's wrong?" asked the old man. "Nothing, sir," was the reply, "but Mr. Leopold always gives me half a crown." "I don't wonder at it. Mr. Leopold is a spendthrift, but he can afford it—he has a rich father. I am an orphan, and can't."

HOME duties to many women seem more important than health.

No matter how ill they feel, they drag themselves through the daily tasks and pile up trouble.

This is heroic but a penalty has to be paid.

WOMAN'S DEVOTION TO HOME

A woman in New Matamoras, Ohio, MRS. ISABELL BRADFIELD, tells in the following letter how she fought with disease of the feminine organs until finally forced to take to her bed. She says:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I feel it my duty to write to you to tell you that I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and think there is no medicine in the world like it. I suffered for nine years, and sometimes for twelve weeks at a time I could not stand on my feet. I had female troubles of all kinds; backache, and headache all the time. Seven different doctors treated me. Some said I would have to go to the hospital and have an operation performed. But oh! how thankful I am that I did not, that I tried your Vegetable Compound instead. I cannot say too much in its praise, nor thank you enough for what it has done for me. I want you to publish this in all the papers for the good of other sufferers."

The wives and mothers of America are given to overwork. Let them be wise in time and at the first indication of female trouble write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for her advice. This advice is promptly given without charge.

The present Mrs. Pinkham's experience in treating female ills is unparalleled; for years she worked side by side with Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, and for sometime past has had sole charge of the correspondence department of her great business, advising and helping by letter as many as a hundred thousand ailing women during a single year.

Hidden Beauty

In Egypt the custom is for Princesses to hide their beauty by covering the lower part of the face with a veil. In America the beauty of many of our women is hidden because of the weakness and sickness peculiar to the sex. If the Egyptian custom prevailed in this country, many sufferers would be glad to cover their premature wrinkles, their sunken cheeks, their unhealthy complexion, from the eyes of the world with the veil of the Orient.

—Frank Bolender ate early cabbage from his own garden yesterday, June 20. This we believe has never been beaten in northern Indiana; at least we have not heard of it. He has other vegetables that are also in fine shape and is making his grounds blossom like the the rose.

—Do you understand that the persistant use of BEGGS BLOOD PURIFIER and BLOOD MAKER will drive disease germs out of your system and life will be worth living. You cannot cure in one week or one month, a blood trouble that has been years in getting a foothold. BEGGS LITTLE GIANT PILLS should be taken twice a week with this remedy. We keep it. Howard McCord.

—Messrs. W. R. Davis and Dallas Gibson have arranged to open a music store in the room formerly occupied by E. C. Sheets and will put in a complete stock of fine pianos, organs and other instruments as well as sheet music and musical merchandise. Both are energetic young men who will give our people the full benefit of their musical experience, and the COURIER hopes they may be successful in their business venture.

—Mrs. Oser, wife of the German Methodist minister, was examined as to her sanity this forenoon by Dr. Vesta M. Swarts and Dr. Nusbaum, The physicians decided that she was of unsound mind and recommended that she be taken to asylum for treatment. She is not seriously affected, however, and it is believed that with careful treatment will fully recover her mental faculties, which all hope may be the case.

LUTHER, Mich., Feb. 24, '92.

DR. C. D. WARNER, Coldwater, Mich.

Dear Sir:—I was afflicted with that common scourge—"Lagrippe," and had violent paroxisms of coughing from which I could get no relief until upon the recommendation of Rev. E. L. Odle I bought a 25 cent bottle of your White Wine of Tar, which afforded immediate relief. I have taken two bottles and now consider myself cured, and I always recommend it to all my friends who are similarly afflicted, for I know it to be good. Very truly yours,

ERNEST NICHOLSON, P. M.

Every wide-awake fruit grower sprays his fruit trees, because he finds it profitable.—Goshen Democrat.

—Agent Zent of the Wabash loves a practical joke as well as the next man and when the joke is on himself, never kicks. —The Butler Record claims to have seen in a democratic paper, 1891, a statement that tin plate could not be made in the United States. We believe the Record is mistaken. We never saw such a statement in democratic papers. We well know that tin plate, has for many years been made here and could have been made one hundred years ago. It is a very simple process and the only excuse for not making it, was to scare congress into giving them a high duty so as to increase their profits.

The Nichols-Shepard Separator

The essential points in a Separator are capacity, thoroughness of separation, and simplicity and durability of construction. On each of these points the Nichols-Shepard Separator has great advantage over all other threshing machines. Any one of the nine sizes will thresh more and save more grain than the corresponding size of any other separator. The Nichols-Shepard Separator is as strongly, simply, yet perfectly made as a separator can be. The work of separation is done without the aid of pickers, cradles, forks, or other complicated parts that in other machines cause continual bother and expense by breaking or wearing out.

This shows the Nichols-Shepard Self-Feeder loaded and ready for the road.
